He was taken to the hotel Friday by Peter Brown, who helped him out of the shallow water at the foot of Couch street after he had plunged in with apparent sulcidal intent. He remained at the hotel but a few minutes and disappeared again, leaving his coat and other effects.

Papers left in the clothing, bearing the name of J. E. Clark, show that he was employed by the Mansfield News until recently and previously by the Blaine Budget. His mother lives at 5514 Sixteenth avenue, Southeast, Seattle, Among his effects was a strangely worded affidavit to the effect that he married Elia Clark in Portland three weeks ago and went to live with her in a tenthouse in Osweso. He gave her $230, and when he sought to recover the money they quarreled. With the affidavit was a purported form of a search warrant directed to the woman.
