Three-Score Veterans of Portland's Erstwhile Military Pride Gather at Board, Men Now Prominent Being Among Them.

The days of auld lang syne, when the infantry companies of the Oragon militia wore red stripes like artillerymen, and when the old First Regiment, on parade, marched past the corner of First and Burnside streets, then the center of the city, were brought back last night on the wings of memory, the eccasion being the thirtteth anniversary of the organization of company G. First Infantry, Oregon National Guard. The event was celebrated with a reunion and banquet in the Elizabethan union and banquet in the Elizabetran room of the Imperial Hotel, where three-score veteran members of the company that was the military pride of Portland from November 15, 1882, the date of its organization, until the outbreak of the Spanish-American War in 1898, when the company was merged in the reorganization of the First in the

Captain R. E. Davis was toastmaster, Before introducing the speakers, he announced the appointment of a new entertainment committee, naming Colo-George T. Willett as chairman, other members to be announced

General Charles F. Beebe, formerly Colonel of the First Regiment, was the Goionel of the First Regiment, was the first speaker. He gave his recollection of early military days in Oregon. General Beebe characterized Company G as the cornerstone of the National Guard organization in Oregon, and said that the example set by the company had been an inspiration and a guide to younger companies.

"Services of Today" was the subtest of a talk by Colonel Charles H. Guard organization in Oregon, and said that the example set by the company had been an inspiration and a guide to younger companies.

"Services of Today" was the subject of a talk by Colonel Charles H. Martin, present commander of the Third Regiment, Oregon National Guard.

"Services of Today" was the subject of a talk by Colonel Charles H. Neighbors to leave the saloon and take a taxicab with Pearl Williams to his home, at 842 East Thirteenth street

Colonel Robert A. Miller was the next speaker. As a member of the Cregon Legislature in the '80s, he was instrumental in the enactment of the Summers military bill, which gave the George Allen, the taxicab driver, and Williams and the taxicab driver, and williams and the taxicab driver, and williams and the taxicab driver, and williams are the taxicab driver, and Oregon Legislature in the '80s, he was instrumental in the enactment of the Summers military bill, which gave the struggling militia of the state much-needed financial support, and provided the first real military code that Oregon had ever had. Colonel Milier told of the struggle to get the bill through.

Colonel George T. Willett told "Incidents of the Life of Company G."

"The Occasion We Celebrate" was the toast to which Johr Gill responded most nappily.

Reference was made by the speakers to the first captain of the company.

Mrs. Noble has a husband living somewhere in the United States. It is known that she was born in Portland and was married when 17 years old, I leaving her husband soon afterwards and going to Nome.

It is believed that she had a trace of Indian blood in her veins, but if she had any native blood it doubtless was a strain of some of the Spanish voyagers under Bodega y Quadra, who were wrecked on the Oregon coast early in the past century. Mrs. Noble was decidedly Spanish in appearance.

After piling the frightened Chinese in one corner of the shack the highwaymen searched the house for two hours, tearing up boards and wrecking the interior. They finally made off with $400 found in a secret hiding place.

Shortly after the robbers had gone one of the Chinese gnawed at the binding rope of his wrists and after 10 minutes' work succeeded in freeing himself and his six companions. Cowed by the threats of the four men, three by the threats of the four men, three of whom were domino masks and the fourth a green felt cloth, the Chinese finally gained courage to run to the home of John Steiger, where they gave the alarm. No immediate communica-tion could be had with the Portland police station, as the robbers had cut telephone wires in the vicinity. Sheriff Word and Deputies Curtis, Lumsden, Phelan and Ford left for Lents at 11 o'clock, where they are using bloodhounds in an effort to trace the robbers.
