Is English Military Force Helpless and Unable to Move for Lack of Horses, as France Fears and Germany Pretends?

BY CAPTAIN C. WIENER. LONDON, Dec. 20.—(Special).—The British army exercises...

The airons, of which over a score were in use, behaved admirably, as did three airships...

It is admitted that the information procured by air by the leading brown force against the skeleton cadres...

No Cause for Alarm Seen.

A good deal of attention has been concentrated on various sensational rumors that have flashed across Europe...

The large supply of an army is to be considered under two entirely different conditions...

The first proposition is merely the buying of some 3000 young horses each year...

After all the draft horse of civil life is as fit to perform the work of an army in war...

Seven pantichion loads of furniture, crapes, bric-a-brac, books from the private library...

Home All Changed Now. King Manuel would recognize with diffidence the interior of his altered home...

I went into the King's little bedroom. There was the narrow French boudoir...

This bed remains the property of the republic, blankets, pillows and all. Everything else has gone from the room...

Count Robert Bentinck is a young man with serious interests. His family is the Continental branch of the Bentinck family...

LONDON, Dec. 20.—(Special).—All engagements are announced as interesting, but one which is not yet announced...

The music-room was distinguished only by piles of Queen Amelia's music (many of the volumes and loose sheets contained the names of personal friends)...

I walked down a servants' corridor, and found a set of electric bell indicators on a wall near the ex-King's apartments...

Piles of china in the white and gold dining-room, and the unceremonious deal of trestles for the guests, were still ranged in position...

Dust lies thick on the hundreds of copper utensils in the glass-roofed kitchen. Many of these utensils are being sent to Culzeau Park...

At present the society hopes only to make the measure voluntary, but it is trying to interest the Cantonal authorities with a view of making it compulsory...
