Minnesotan Dominates Lumber Industry of United States During Years Prior to Doctrine of Resources' Conservation.

PASADENA, Cal., April 4.-With his seven children gathered about his bed-side, Frederick Weyerhaeuser, aged 79, multimillionaire Minnesota timberman dled here today following an attack of severe cold, caught on Bunday, March 22, while Mr. Weyerhaeuser was attending church. The final sinking spell came at a The final sinking spell came at a time when it was confidently believed Mr. Weyerhaeuser would recover. Several days ago he appeared to be qu the verge of dissolution, but resorts to oxygen rallied him and thereafter he appeared to rapidly improve. The only disquieting symptom was an uncertain heart action and the physicians believed yesterday they had finally overcome this. But this morning it recurred and neither oxygen nor any other stimulant would avail.

Total Riches Unknown.

Weyerhaeuser's climb to wealth was only discovered by the people of the Nation when it had become a question as to whether he was richer than John D. Rockefeller. The exact amount of his riches is not known. He started in the lumber business at Rock Island, Ill., in the early '60s.

He was born in a small village on the Rhine, near the city of Mainz, Germany, November 21, 1834. After his father died the rest of the family came to Northeast, Erie County, Pa., when Frederick was 18 years old.

Brewer Idea Surrendered.

In early life Weyerhaeuser decided he would become a brewer and went to work at $4 a month. He gave up the brewing idea finally because, as he expressed it, "I realize how many brewers become their own best customers."
Farming was the next attempt, at a salary of $13 a month. After four years at Northeast the family moved to Coal Valley, Rock Island County, Ill., in 1856.

Weyerhaenser Shrewd Buyer.

He saved a little money and, with his brother-in-law, F. C. A. Denkman, bought a small mill. They gidn't have enough to pay for it but gave their notes. Weyerhaenser held the buying for the mill. He was shrewd and prabable asked as nois, but through purchases of timber land in the Appalachian country and various other parts of the United States, own more standing timber than other firm in the world.

Mr. Weyerhaeuser lived very simply. No one ever supposed from his quiet, modest manner that he was enormously rich. Ten years ago his wealth was estimated at $30,000,000. Since then estimated at $30,000,000. Since then the value of lumber has increased greatly. His estate may be worth $40,000,000, $50,000,000 or $60,000,000 today. He had no fads. Work was his recreation. One of the queer things about Mr. Weyerhaeuer was that he never lost a dollar in a lumber deal and never made a dollar in an other business in a dollar in any other business in which he invested money. One of the Jokes he told at his own expense has to do with his purchase of bank stock. Before he got to be very rich he was induced to take an interest in various small banking concerns. "Never lose a log" became Mr. Weyerhaeuser's slogan in the days when thousands of white pine logs escaped didly from rafts being floated from the woods to the mills. He picked profits with both hands from this source when others refused to bother "with so small a matter."

Again the courtroom was crowded with women from all stratus of society, Incidentally Attorney Langhorne brought out how Rev. M. He admitted he had tried to get Mrs. Barnhisel interested in the cult ties. He admitted he had tried to get Mrs. Barnhisel interested in the cult. Rev. M. Barnhisel screamed the "lie" at Mr. Langhorne when prodded as to where he get hold of Mrs. Barnhisel's letters and women in court loudly applauded him. Later in the afternoon he broke down completely and wept like a child.

Letters Come Up. "Explain to the court how you came in possession of the letters you have introduced in this case," demanded Mrs.

"I say that's a lie," screamed Rev. Mr. Barnhisel, springing to his feet.

I always figured that if there was any method, by God's will and my own determination, that I might yet help to keep her as she wanted and that we might live together happily, I would."

Rev. Mr. Barnhisel broke down at this point, and with tears streaming from his eyes, he said, "and you may damn me for a fool, if you want to."

JUDGE REBUKES COUNT

RUSSIAN NOBLEMAN TRIES TO RIDE HORSE ON SIDEWALK.

Venice, Cal., Jurist Tells Scion He Is No Account When it Comes to Violating City Ordinances.

LOS ANGELES, April 4 .- (Special.) -In the future Count Sergius Apraxin, scion of a noble house of Russia, who boasts of spending $15,000 in three weeks in Venice, will not ride horseback on the sidewalks of that city. Taken before Judge Rennie today, he pleaded that being a member of the Russian nobility he should be exempt from petty city ordinances and should be allowed to do as he pleases.

"You may be a count when you are in Russia," the court ruled, "but you're no account in Venice when it comes to violating city ordinances. You don't to violating city ordinances. You don't look a bit better to us here than anybody else. I'll let you go this time with a reprimand and a warning."
Count Sergius, before departing, invited the court and the policeman who arrested him to dine with him at the King George Hotel tonight. Both declined.
