

Thave to turn my face holloward the smile fades. "This trip is purely domestic, how-ever. We got here, my lady wife and I. Thursday night and we're leaving Sunday. Every year Mrs. Blythe goes abroad. We've an only child, our son-here in Portland, and since he couldn't come East just now. I brought his mother to see him before she sails But Tm coming soon again, maybe in the Fall, to gather some news." Then I shoved in my question about the toils muddle. Interviews Like a Politician. His brilliant, green-gray eyes looked way off over the top of the Postoffice as he replied: "Tes, I think the newspaper game is the greatest in the world, and I've put my boy into it. But the place to play it is in the West. Competition is too keen in the East. It is heartbreak-ine".

too keen in the East. It is heartbreak-ing." The spoke of his work with an easy and effortless flow of humor. "Oh, what wouldn't I give to organ-ize a union wherein I could p resent some of these dubs as they really are." he said. "Newspaper wilters give the dear public men and women qualities they don't possess and never could possess, in order to make good stories. "Once an editor wired me, 'So and so is in your eity on a tour; wire us six epigrams a day. The man, a big political power, was noted for his epi-grams. He never had made one in his life. Some clever newspaper man had attributed qualities of humor to him and the other papers had kept it up. Bigthe Framed His Own.

them all myself. They were printed and when the statesman died they were collected in his blography." "Why don't you write an expose, a roal who is who, and tell us all about them." I queried. "Why don't you," he retorted. "Til wager that right here in Portland you have 25 pretentious bluffs, who figure in your daily papers, with their social, political and business uprisings and downsittings. downsittings.

"No, a woman can understand what-ever she wants to understand, what a lot of things men don't want her to understand," explained Mr. Blythe. "but I meant that, if you didn't under-stand politics, I'd explain to you the situation." situation.

Personally Conducted Tour Taken. So, mollihed, I pleaded ignorance and he diagrammed with his hands and his cane and delightful animation. Having got this personally conducted polltical tour through my head, he said: "Now, listen! Yes, the free tolls bill will be repealed and I'll tell you why. John W. Kerns, who ran for Vice-President with the late Mr. Bryan and who is the Democratic leader of the Senate two days ago got up in that body and suggested that a day be set for voting on the repeal bill and asked if there was any objection to May 27. McCumber said the date was not agree-McCumber said the date was not agree-
