In response to a toast on "Comradeship," Mrs. W. J. Hawkins said on Monday at the Psychology Club's luncheon: "This is pre-eminently the age of woman. She has discovered herself and she has been discovered. The next great step in her progress is her discovery of her neighbor woman. She must learn the truth, that femininity is a divine principle and a definite place in the great purpose of things, and that woman must define this principle to herself to find her true relation to life and to womanhood."

"How shall we discover our fellow woman?" "First, know that in truth her capacity for attaining 'No. 1' is limited because she is a human being. Never criticize her adversely, because, whether you know it or not, you are trying to measure her by your own 'No. 1' when you do so. Accept her heartily within her limitations and personalities. In the latter is where she probably differs from you, and where you will find a world of worth if you know how to search. If you do not, the first work you need to do for yourself is to learn to find the worth in the work of others. Always there. Then give her freely of what you know is your highest attainment."

"In this lies true and worthy comradeship, and you will soon find that you are traveling together on the road to 'Harmony.' 'Woman's Road' is the great purpose of things, and that Josephine Hammond has wonderfully portrayed, and you will surely reach the good through 'Light, Love and Love.'"
