COLD RAINS COVER

Wintry Weather Does Little Damage but Cherries Are Likely to Be Hurt.

WASHINGTON SHIVERS, TOO

Chilly Drizzle Continues in Portland and Forecaster Gives No Hope for Relief-Medford Festivities Are Called Off.

Chilly winds and rain that swept in from the sea Friday night covered practically all Oregon and much of Washington yesterday. The wintry weather came behind a "low" that caused fears for vessels at sea.

Little or no damage was done in the state, but fears for the cherry and strawberry crops were aroused. Unless the temperature climbs again in an unusually short time growers of the fruit will suffer losses.

From Astoria hope came at night that warmer weather might be expect-ed, but in the Willamette Valley and Rogue River Valley less encouragement was given.

Even Medford people found overcoats comfortable and outside festivities in connection with the rose and baby shows had to be abandoned. In the southern part of the state the rain was beneficial.

His predictions of Wednesday, Thurs-

His predictions of Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, and perhaps a few days previous that there would be a "rising temperature tomorrow" was not borne out again yesterday, which was colder at its warmest by eight degrees than Friday.

There was a little more than sixtenths of an inch of rain up to 5 o'clock, when Mr. Drake shut up shop. The deficiency of Portland's rainfall for the year, beginning September 1, 1913, from the average annual precipitation is 6.02 inches.

The miniature rose festival planned by the children of Willamette Hights was indefinitely postponed because of the dampness.

Those, who pose as being wise to the ways of the weather claim that it is highly probable that the "wet spell" will be over before Tuesday, the first day of the Rose Festival, and that sunshine and an ambitious thermometer will obtain through the Acting District Forecaster Drake, having carefully conned his instruments, announced that there would be showers and southerly winds today in Portland, with the same water to be a superficient of the same water to Portland, with the same meteorological menu for all of Washington, Oregon and Idaho.

The Importance of Detail in Interior Decoration

A decorative scheme promising well may be marred by one or two irrelevant points of detail. Those decorating their homes should keep this uppermost in mind; should seek the advice of experienced decorators in the planning of schemes for this and that room. Too often are irresponsible decorators and furnishers intrusted with the designing and carrying to completion of interior decoration, with disappointing results.

Fidelity to the principles of interior decoration, together with wide experience in the decorating of many fine as well as modest homes, have created for the Decorative Department of this store a prestige that commands the consideration of home owners. We invite you to consult our decorative experts as to the scheme or schemes adaptable to your particular type of home and its furnishings.
