MIXED DOUBLES RULES SET OUT BY W. A. GOSS

Courtesy to Be Shown Your Own Partner and Girl Opponent, Though Neither Should Go to Extent of Belittling Her, Says Tennis Player.

BY WALTER A. GOSS. Over the net, he is prone to think he can cover the whole 36-foot expanse.

It is in this rule book that the danger signal is noted. Once again we come to the danger signal for what happens to the lobber if necessary the man must do most of the hitting overhead, and to my mind he should hit almost everything in the air, rather than allowing the ball to bounce.

Service Makes Difference. With the lady serving, she cannot play opposite her partner, for she cannot cover court fast enough to follow in her service, thus joining her partner who is at the net.

She must therefore have a very distinct understanding with her partner as to which side of the court she should cover. Much might depend on her ability to take a back-hand stroke and the location of her service, as well as the point from which she elects to stand at the time of delivery.

For instance, should she elect to play on the same side as that from which service was delivered, she should keep the service as close to the center line as possible, thus allowing her partner at the net to neglect more space in the alley and also preclude the receiver in making a quick court stroke.

Many times the rule can be varied with great success; for instance, the lady serving might be very weak on her back hand. Two things can be done effectively.

The man can either stay in the back of the court, ready to take the back-hand return or, what is better, he can be prepared to jump across the court immediately the service is delivered, thus allowing the lady to play her fore-hand stroke.

If he desires, he may continually stand on the same side, thus protecting the lead right from the jump and seemed well on the road to victory, when the Printing Trades League's two job teams are perched in first place in the percentage column, and a battle royal will be staged at the McCaw field, park tomorrow at 5:30.

The closest game of the schedule so far was between the Journal and job printers Thursday afternoon at Vaughn street park. The newspapermen took the lead right from the jump and seemed well on the road to victory, when the Printing Trades League's two job teams are perched in first place in the percentage column, and a battle royal will be staged at the McCaw field, park tomorrow at 5:30.

Frank to the winning team, but are taking no chances with the job men and will spring a few surprises themselves.

Games scheduled for today are Journal vs. Engravers and Oregonian vs. Stereotypers.

CONBEAR'S CREW ON TRIAL

Washington Oarsmen at Poughkeepsie Do 4 Miles in 21:41.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y., June 20.—Nine of the 15 crews in training for the intercollegiate regatta, to be held on the Hudson next Friday afternoon, had time trials this afternoon, and although nothing official was given out, their coaches expressed satisfaction over the results.

Conbear with his powerful crew was the first to start a trial row. The crew was taken to the head of the course at an easy pace, and when on the line they got their work.

The men stood the task exceptionally well, and rowed rapidly back to the boathouse after the finish.

TENNIS HONORS DIVIDED

WOLFARD AND MISS HYDER ARE SINGLES CHAMPIONS.

Men's Doubles Event Goes to Bent and Jones, of Jefferson, and Women's to Misses Oberg and Clark.

INTERCOLLEGIATE TENNIS CHAMPIONS BY VIRTUE OF VICTORY IN TOURNAMENT WHICH ENDED YESTERDAY.

Men's singles—Caitlin Wolfard, Jefferson High. Women's singles—Miss Hyder, Washington High. Men's doubles—Bent and Jones, Jefferson High. Women's doubles—Miss Oberg and Miss Clark, Washington High.

Portland's second intercollegiate tennis tournament closed with the final games Friday night. Caitlin Wolfard, of Jefferson High School, had to meet a man from his own school in the final. He defeated Kyle 6-3, 6-2.

Miss Hyder's victory in the women's singles makes the second year that the cup for the women's play has gone to Washington High School. Miss Hyder met Miss Povey, of Jefferson, and defeated her 6-2, 6-3. Miss Dibrulle won it for Washington last year.

The play all the way through showed Jefferson High to be strong in tennis. In the finals of each event Jefferson players took part. In the women's doubles Miss Stobben and Miss Brown lost to Misses Oberg and Clark, of Washington.

In the men's doubles Bent and Jones, of Jefferson, won out from Lewis and McClintock, of Portland Academy, 6-1, 6-2.

Over the net, he is prone to think he can cover the whole 36-foot expanse. In this he is unfair to his partner. He should know on what side she remains (much depending on the strength of her back hand, which has already been determined before the game started) and unless he is sure of his ability to successfully volley with one arm, he should always allow the ball to pass to the lady.

She must try for a deep return, which will enable her partner to remain in command of the net. If her return falls short, the man should be keen to detect the trouble and with all possible haste give up the net and join his partner, once more playing side by side in the back of the court, till he again sees his chance to follow the return to the net.

Danger Signal Noted. Once again we come to the danger signal for what happens to the lobber if necessary the man must do most of the hitting overhead, and to my mind he should hit almost everything in the air, rather than allowing the ball to bounce.
