CHARITY WORKER IN CITY

Miss Emily Farley, of Honolulu, Visits States to Study Work.

Miss Emily Farley, who has been a visitor in Portland during the last week, was on her way from Honolulu to her home in Boston. Miss Farley has passed the last year in Associated Charities' work in the Hawaiian Islands and she has been investigating the methods of the associations on this coast with a view of telling the Honolulu workers how things are done in the States.

Miss Farley talked of the labor conditions and of the plight of the unemployed in Honolulu. She says that it was the first time in the history of the Associated Charities, that they had to cope with the problem. Before there were only occasional cases of want and misery.

Russians, Spanish, Portuguese and Porto Ricans were among those out of work. Many of these had left the plantations thinking times were good in Honolulu. Finding business quiet they returned to the plantations only to find their jobs gone and starvation facing them. Nearly all of these men had families and many children. It was these that appealed especially to Miss Farley.

When the poor people came back to the city, they had to be cared for by the Associated Charities and the workers met the problem well and did as well as was possible, although the gravity of the situation was new to them.

So interested did Miss Farley become that she decided to go back to Boston and make a thorough study of social service work. She expressed herself as delighted with the way things were being managed in Portland and said she had gathered many valuable pointers. Miss Farley is a member of an old family of Boston.

Got His Attention

(Washington Post.)

The customs inspector evidently realized that we were important people.

"So?"

"Yes, he passed some baggage with hardly a glance, but when he came in it was he was careful to go through everything."
