The Reign of the Tailored Suit Was Never More Pronounced The New Fall Models Are Elegant

There's a simplicity, soberness and elegance about the new Fall Suits that is most alluring. We might say the modes are restful, both as to design and coloring. The prevailing shades are navy, black, brown, Copenhagen, dark greens, and the materials in most favor are broadcloth, gabardine, poplins, chevriots and serges, in plain weaves.

The "Redingote" is a favorite. Long Tunics are in high favor, and the Basque Coat is perhaps the leader in Fall styles. Many of the latter show fancy vests with flat braid trimmings.

We invite our patrons' inspection of the groups of authentic Fall styles in Women's and Misses' Tailored Suits. Priced $19.50 to $62.50.

MUNICH DOMESTIC SCIENCE SCHOOL UNIQUE INSTITUTION IN EUROPE

Teachers of Public Schools Who Give Instruction in Cooking in Eighth Grade Sent to This Place for Six Months' Course of Training City Paying Salaries While There.

BY ALICE V. JOYCE.
STRATFORD-ON-AVON, England, July 20.—(Special.)—"I hear it charged against me that I sought to destroy institutions. But really I am neither for nor against institutions. Only I will establish in Manhattan and in every city of these states, inland and seaboard, and in the fields and woods, and above every kettle, little or large, that darts the water, the institution of the dear love of comrades."
—Walt Whitman.

A house is built of bricks and stones, Of hills and posts and piers; But a home is built of loving deeds— That stand a thousand years.
—Victor Hugo.

After visiting many schools of various descriptions, from the kindergarten to the university, and seeing many new and interesting features, the most interesting to me were the schools which directly help to make better homes.

Most of these have been established by societies who felt that the government schools were not training their girls to be efficient home-builders.

now it is a credit to the educational institutions of their city. The teachers of the public schools who teach cooking in the eighth grade are sent to this school for a six months' course of training, the city paying their salary while in training.

Various governments are planning to take charge of some of these schools. They realize the profit derived from such valuable instruction.

The Princezein Arnulf Seminary, in Munich, is supported by the Society for the Household Education of Women. It offers three regular courses and a number of short courses to accommodate the students. Their regular courses are a two-year course for teachers of cooking and housekeeping, a one-year course for housekeeping or sewing, and a six months' course for general housekeeping. Students may enter the seminary course when 18 years old and the general courses when 17.

Chance to Work Way Given. For those who cannot afford tuition, the privilege of helping with other duties and care of the school is offered. A four weeks' course for the soldiers who cook in the army is provided, and they must leave the kitchen as neat as they found it. There also are night classes for girls at a very reasonable price.

In the cooking classes each teacher is provided with a separate pantry and the students are taught to buy materials, test food values and keep accounts accurately. Cabinets with many kinds of utensils are studied; their construction, use and care, also their economic value. The lessons are given theoretically and the practice follows this instruction. Careful notebooks are prepared for future reference. A large garden where students may spend leisure hours, study the growth of vegetables, produce flowers for decorations in their rooms or for the tables in the restaurant is well cared for by these girls. It was one of my disappointments while taking cooking in a night class to be too busy to have my own garden with the rest of the students.

Restaurant Self-Supporting. The restaurant in connection with the school is self-supporting. Meals are served to customers for 110 marks ($28) without dessert and 120 marks ($30) with dessert. The students pay 30 marks ($7) for their dinners, but ordinarily eat the product of their classroom in a special dining-room.

In the training class for teachers, pupils from the Fortbuilding Schule come as students. The classroom is equipped the same as those of the public schools, with one table, one range and a cabinet for each six pupils. This number represents a family, each taking the place of father, mother, children, guest or servant in turn, and the prepared meal then served, a valuable lesson in social adjustment and home etiquette.

who have donated their time and service to the cause of assisting many young women, has accomplished great things for humanity.

In Berne, Switzerland, we visited another school similar to the one just described, also had the pleasure of meeting one of the directors who told us the history of the school. She also told us that the state was almost ready to take control of this school, which is well established.

The school for crippled children in Munich was intensely interesting. This is a state school with a free clinic. It was amazing to see the girls crochet, embroider and knit with only one hand, possibly that one the left hand. By cleverly devised appliances they were accomplishing good results.

The gymnasium was being covered with heavy linoleum and to be used also as a theater for their amusements. Both Catholic and Protestant chapels were in the same building. Everything possible seemed to be done for their comfort and happiness.

Students Made Self-Supporting. The principal, a sympathetic man who has charge of the school for 25 years said that of the children who have left this school in the last 23 years 84 per cent had been self-supporting.

In the kindergarten schools they have many interesting features to amuse the little people. There were screams of delight as different pupils in the class performed the puppet shows in the small theater. These kindergartens are more of day nurseries than schools, which the city provides for eight hours daily while the mothers are working. And their "German Bands"—to see their serious faces as these little tots follow the directions of their leader, is very entertaining.

Everywhere we went, we met teachers with their pupils in orderly lines of march, going to museums, stores, galleries to study pictures, botanical gardens, parks, fields or forests. While coming from the Black Forest at Frieburg, we met nine different classes in a five-minute car ride from the forest.

The teachers have an aim—to prepare pupils for a life's work and to make good citizens of them. They are taught to know their own country, also to love it. While visiting a sixth grade class in Amsterdam, the teacher told me they study the United States in one lesson.

Specially trained teachers teach sewing. Drawing is given an important place in the school course and language, reading and history of art developed through it.

Many schools have baths for the pupils, but they are not compulsory. Play is supervised by the teachers after school, boys and girls alternating in the use of the playgrounds, each having two evenings a week of play when the weather permits. Teachers who work extra hours receive extra pay.

The thermometer of each room is placed in the wall can be studied by the janitor through a glass plate from the hall, giving no disturbance to the pupils in the room.

Linoleum in Halls. Halls are covered with heavy linoleum, affording a quiet tread and conserving the nerve-force of teachers and pupils.

Home study is encouraged for older pupils. Principals and other lehrer spend at least half their time teaching classes in their school. In Holland the teacher must remain in the room while the principal is teaching so that he "may profit by the head-teacher's example." In many schools of Germany the ober lehrer has regular classes. The teachers have an hour weekly to consult with parents, either at the school or in their homes.

These same societies for the household education of women have provided "the traveler teacher," who gives a six weeks' course any place a number of women request it. These sessions are held in churches, school-houses or private homes and have greatly assisted their cause.

London Committee Efficient. The education committee of the Borough of Eastham, London, has shown remarkable initiative in its management of schools. The first expression in its book of regulations for the management of day schools, 1914, is: "The education committee intends that every child in its schools shall have a thorough elementary education, combined with physical and moral training."

My visit to the school office, clinic, nurses' rooms and doctors' offices was very interesting. In conversation with the chief medical inspector, who firmly believes that children suffering from disease of skin, weak heart, lungs or digestive organs, difficult breathing from adenoids and other physical weaknesses, has not an equal chance with the normal child and his physical condition should be carefully studied, being vastly more important than his elementary education, many kindly suggestions were afforded.

In London one is first questioned, "Why do you think of ornamental suffragettes?" The first thought is inclined to condemn the destruction of valuable property and heirlooms, but after hearing their defense from educated and sensible mothers who are not asking for their own families, but whose real motherly spirit seems to be the leading inspiration, one can only sympathize and delay expression.

might better the conditions compelling three and four families to live in a one-room tenement and now the motherly spirit of protection has been driven to desperation." They are not a class of women seeking notoriety, but sincerely hopeful of relieving the distress of poverty and sickness now existing in their metropolis.

In the Shakespeare country a quiet beauty is seen everywhere. As we visit the home of the "beloved bard," the old-fashioned cottage of Anne Hathaway, follow the course of the Avon past the church and then visit the Memorial Theater, where Shakespeare's plays are annually studied, many of his beautiful thoughts come into real life and we find "sermons in every thing."

GIFT SPAN TO RISE SOON

Work on Benson's Multnomah Falls Bridge Starts Tomorrow.

Work will begin tomorrow on the steel and concrete bridge B. Benson has added to his gift of Multnomah Falls on the Columbia River Highway. The bridge will be over the lower cascade, 200 yards down from the big fall and will make the main fall easier of approach, via the rustic path which now leads along the right-hand bank of the stream.

The bridge will be of massive construction in keeping with the natural surroundings. It will be built by R. L. Ringer. The bridge will be 59 feet long, abutting on stone ledges. Its height above water will be 35 feet. Roadmaster Yeon took a party over the Columbia Highway as far as Multnomah Falls last Tuesday. It is expected that Oneonta will be reached by September 1.

ALBANY, Ore., Aug. 15.—(Special.)—Albany's public schools will open this year on September 21. This was the announcement made today by C. W. Boettcher, superintendent.
