HARRY THAW PART OF PICTURESQUE VILLAGE

Recent Visitor Declares Slayer of Sanford White Is Broad, Brilliant Man and Should Be Free From Further Prosecution.

BY CHARLES E. GEORGE. OREGONIAN, N. H., Aug. 29.—(Special).—I had the pleasure recently of an interview lasting several hours with Harry K. Thaw, whose summer home is at the Mount Madison House in this village. Gorham is a beautiful spot, a village of one street surrounded by stately trees, nestled behind which are well-built, homelike residences so common to New England. The whole surrounded by towering mountains adds picturesque to the scene. It is in every sense of the word a fitting location for the student, the philosopher or the man of affairs who leaves the busy marts of life for a few weeks or months of rest. Amid these surroundings Harry K. Thaw, but a few years ago one of the most talked of men in court annals, is making his summer home. He is essentially a part of the village; the fact of the tragedy with which he was connected and of the court proceedings resultant therefrom, which have not as yet been concluded, do not serve to make him in any sense an object of curiosity upon the part of the villagers, who respect him as one of their own, who entertain for him a feeling of genuine brotherliness because in every sense of the word he is a man among men, well qualified to bear whatever part is assigned him in the burdens of life along with the best that New England affords. This is saying a great deal because round, almost boyish face, which however bears the stamp of intelligence, his brown eyes convey to the visitor the appearance of absolute sincerity in his dealings or in the matter of his statements. Outside of the fact that Harry K. Thaw is a much better looking man than the great majority of men who have attained the age of 40 years, there is nothing uncommon about him.

Referring back to the events of the last eight years he talks with the strength of a consciousness and knowledge of the law which is particularly convincing.

Justice of Act His Belief. I believe that Harry K. Thaw, while he did not say so in so many words, believes absolutely and thoroughly that he was justified in his slaying of Stanford White. I am impressed with the fact that any man of his intelligence who possesses the rich red blood that flows in the veins of every true man, under the same circumstances, would have done as he did.

Resting his case upon the broad principles of the unwritten law, his act, unquestionably one of a moment's delirium, was caused by the terrible wrongs perpetrated and thrown into his face by the man who met his end at his hands; Thaw evinces no bitter feeling such as might be expected over a discussion of the tragic event of June 28, 1906.

He feels, in common with all those who have made a study of the case, that there has been in his incarceration at Mattewan a violation of every constitutional right which a citizen of the United States has fundamentally granted to him.

To those who know Thaw, or who have an opportunity of talking with him on any subject, the question of his sanity is not an issue. If he has eccentricities, they are not any more apparent in his case than they are in 99 out of every 100 individuals who are up the busy man of affairs in any trade or in any profession. A little over six feet in height, straight as an Indian, with ruddy, Harry Thaw.

Rather I found the quiet and unostentatious man, thoroughly equipped to discuss any question, and during an interview lasting through the forenoon and afternoon I saw no indication that he felt a self-importance either natural or artificial. Any man in Thaw's place would feel, as undoubtedly he does, that an attempt is made to keep him the victim of bolts and bars, because it is feared by certain astute legal gentlemen in New York, who represent a coterie of rich satyrs, that if victory finally perches on the Thaw's banners they will have lost their control of numberless victims of the wealthy clients' passions, who can then no longer be intimidated. Others might cause exposure, and that is what is feared. Thaw's information dates back so many years that this is now of no interest. To say that he is not a safe man to be at large is a ridiculous proposition. I believe that his self-control is sufficient so that if he were thrown into an assemblage into which Jerome and men of his class—men who have been guilty of persecuting Thaw—were his associates, that he would quietly absent himself from the gathering rather than to become involved in any argument which might serve to stir up or to renew past memories.

Issues Not Affected. While bail has been denied Thaw, it in no way prejudices his case, nor is it to be taken as an indication of the ruling of the Supreme Court of the United States upon the issues involved in the appeal now pending there. While he is in the custody of the law, as exemplified by Holman A. Drew, high Sheriff of this county, yet there is no likelihood that if he were released upon his own recognizance he would do other than go about his work and live the same life he is living today. The restrictions which are imposed upon him are not odious; in fact, they are hardly noticeable. As an evidence of the honesty of his intentions, some days since, while on a fishing trip a few miles up in the mountains, he became estranged from his guard, lost his food, a storm and darkness came up, and after some hours he was found seated upon a rock waiting for the inevitable. He wanted someone to find him and show him the way back to Gorham. Considering the points involved in the appeal from Judge Aldrich's decision granting the writ of habeas corpus and thereby holding that Thaw was entitled to his discharge, it seems entirely unlikely that the Supreme Court of the United States will do other than affirm Judge Aldrich's decision, in the opinion of the best lawyers throughout the country who are familiar with the facts, with the decrees handed down and with the law. And, therefore, it has been made, upon the part of some newspapers, to appear that Thaw is not the man he really is, thereby seeking to make of him an object of curiosity; and again this same vicious press has cast base insinuations upon the integrity of the Federal Court of New Hampshire, as well as of the nine Judges who are eventually to pass upon the issues involved at Washington. The purpose is plain.

Judge Aldrich in his decision passed directly upon the fact that the process under which Mr. Thaw was sought to be returned to New York was not due to his understrapper Jerome, ought to be dismissed for bad faith. A careful reading of all the evidence submitted on the habeas corpus proceedings in order to accomplish his purpose Mr. Jerome attempted a misuse of the extradition process, his ulterior purposes being apparent at every step of the proceedings. No charge of crime in the State of New York today exists against Harry K. Thaw in a constitutional sense. Not content with determining the case upon the law alone involved, Judge Edgar Aldrich, a man of unimpeachable integrity and of absolute honesty, appointed a commission consisting of one of the most prominent lawyers in England, and three expert alienists of the highest standing. These men had no axe to grind; they were not bought with Thaw's money. The sole idea being that the question of his sanity should be disposed of by a non-partisan commission, by men who entered upon the discharge of their duty without any certainty of compensation, feeling that it was an obligation they owed to the public at large. The finding of this body of alienists was to the effect that Thaw, in all respects was a normal man. This finding being a part of the proceedings of the court ruling, is entitled to consideration. While Mr. Thaw is enjoying himself as best he may in one of the most delightful spots in the mountainous regions of New Hampshire, he is entitled, in common justice, to his release on bail. When the mandate of the Supreme Court of the United States is issued, whatever the decision may be, Harry K. Thaw will be at the bar of justice expecting his discharge, but man-like prepared to meet that judgment if, as seems most likely, it should be adverse to his interests.

"War Bug" Is Busy Here. A "war bug" is loose in Portland, according to the information filed with the police yesterday by S. W. Ormsby, publisher of the daily war maps, 429 Morrison street. Mr. Ormsby complained that a neatly dressed man wearing a flowing tie and carrying a French newspaper had been visiting his subscribers. He said the man represented himself to be a United States secret service agent and informed subscribers that they must remove the maps, saying they were a violation of the neutrality laws. Astepp employs 8000 ropemakers.
