

NETHERLANDS AND TO FLEEING PEOPLE

Rosendaal, Holland, is Haven of Rest for Unhappy Antwerp People.

REFUGEES IN THOUSANDS

Panic at Frontier Follows False Rumor That Germans are Coming—Many "War Babies" Lost, Others Adopted.

AMSTERDAM, Oct. 11.—(Dispatch to the London Daily Chronicle.)—When the people of Antwerp had to fly at midnight by the light of their burning homes and to the death march of booming guns, they naturally sought the land of least resistance, and for the majority that line led due north through Essen to Rosendaal.

Though Rosendaal is little more than a village, it is an important railway center, commanding all the main routes and with a station nearly as large as all the rest of the town in which to handle the frontier traffic, it became an ideal clothing house for refugees. It is estimated that nearly 200,000 have passed through during the last few days since to be distributed all over Holland.

Frontier Days as Nightmare.

The townspeople and troops alike threw themselves and all their resources into the work of helping the helpless. It became unfashionable in Rosendaal as seen during the painful days and nights spent there to stand idle for a moment or to snatch an hour's sleep, if there were, as there always were, fresh streams of refugees to care for, and to eat while refugees stood unaided with their hands out. We must write Rosendaal high in the list of places that have served the world by love and mercy. These days and nights at the frontier seem a hideous nightmare.

There came in little flashes of memory, blurred by fatigue and want of sleep, pictures of weary women tramping along the country roads with babies and bundles ever pressing northward from the glare and guns and terrifying cry "The Germans are coming!" of mothers who sobbed in churches and railway waiting-rooms, sobbed over the loss of little ones from whom they had been separated in the rush and confusion of children who cried for food; of unknown miles only weeks or months old, who had been found abandoned in railway carriages, and had been carried to shelter by ever splendidly tender Dutch soldiers.

But babies, who in the tidal wave of war have been washed out of their wrecked homes, are cast on no inhospitable shore, for there is hardly a mother in Holland who will not adopt a little Belgian war baby if efforts now being made to trace its parents fail.

Not Enough Babies to Go Around.

Just now a young married Dutch lady has been telling with tears in her eyes of unclaimed babies in Amsterdam and other towns, and it was suggested half jokingly that she should adopt one.

"I have offered to do so," she said, "but there are not enough to go around. We would like to take one—and that is the spirit in which Holland is working for the refugees today."

The Amsterdam Telegraaf is opening its columns to refugees and is willing to advertise for relatives from whom they have been separated in flight. The first notice appears on behalf of a baby five weeks old, and asks in her name, though she can give no name, if anyone will claim her. There follows a description of her appearance and clothes.

Dutch Soldiers Help.

At the central station, where trainloads of refugees are arriving, overcrowded, unwatered and ever-willing Rosendaal motor lorries driven by soldiers meet them and hurry them off with their pathetic little bundles to shelter in the houses and in the diamond-cutting factories which are standing idle, to private homes thrown open to homeless and to hotels that take them in for more than the usual fee, offer to pay and for nothing if they have no money.

On one lorry a woman suddenly threw up her arms, uttering a cry that waved her hand to a group on another lorry. She was too overcome to speak, but on the other lorry a man heard her cry, looked across and saw her in tears. They were husband and wife, and had seen nothing of one another since they left each other in flight.

Separate and overwhelming are the tragedies that every one of these tens of thousands represents. A young mother is leaving her baby in shelter in Rosendaal after vain searches for her children. During the flight from Antwerp her husband fell dead at her side under splintering fragments of German shells.

Refugees Fear Germans.

The feeling of terror is still on the frontier. In the early hours of yesterday a rumor arose in Essen on the Belgian side of the boundary, a little to the south of Rosendaal, that the Germans were coming. A panic set in among the thousands of refugees, and there was a stampede, the alarm being quelled only by a parish priest, who ascended the church tower, scanned the countryside, and assured the people no troops were in sight.

Motors from Rosendaal are scouring the countryside as far south toward Antwerp as possible, picking up the sick and aged stragglers.

The Rosendaal correspondent of the Telegraph writes: "I have just driven as near Antwerp as possible. This is not easy with roads blocked with streams of refugees. South of Essen the numbers decrease. From Herges-Zoom I learn there are about 25,000 refugees in that town. The situation is desperate owing to lack of food, and doctors fear that concentration of so many people where insufficient accommodation is available may cause insubstantial conditions and bring about an outbreak of disease. There are still thousands of refugees at Flushing. A special train is taking as many as possible to North Holland. The Belgian steamer Euphrates left with hundreds of refugees this afternoon for Bruges."

WAR COST 10 BILLIONS

FRENCH ECONOMIST PREDICTS DESTRUCTION OF SEVEN MONTHS.

Most of World's Savings Will Be Absorbed and Progress Will Receive Serious Check.

PARIS, Oct. 17.—Paul Leroy-Beaulieu, the French economist, estimates that each of the greater belligerents is spending an average equivalent to $200,000,000 a month.

In presenting these figures to the Academy of Moral and Political Sciences today, he said that he considered it probable that the war would continue for seven months, from August 1. Accordingly the five greater powers engaged were committed to an expenditure of $7,000,000,000. Each of the smaller states, including Japan, will have expenses from $500,000,000 to $800,000,000 to meet.

M. Leroy-Beaulieu continued: "The war will cost the fighting powers roughly, from $9,000,000,000 to $10,000,000,000. These figures, which do not take into account the losses of revenue during hostilities, will be met first, by the issuance of notes against the accumulated gold in the government banks; second, by the issuance of short-term Treasury bonds, to which all governments are having recourse during the war, and, third, by delaying payments for military necessities. The larger part of the savings of the world will be absorbed by the taking up of national loans, and economic progress will be seriously checked."

MAJOR-GENERAL IS KILLED

Hubert I. W. Hamilton and 10 Other British Officers Among Dead.

LONDON, Oct. 17.—A casualty list of the British expeditionary force in France, dated October 14, reports the death of Major-General Hubert I. W. Hamilton and ten other officers and the wounding of 25 officers.

Major-General Hubert Ian Wetherall Hamilton commanded the third division of the British field troops and was mentioned in official dispatches of Field Marshal Sir John French to Earl Kitchener early in September, reporting the desperate fighting in the vicinity of Mons. He was born in 1861. He served in the Egyptian and South African campaigns in 1900-05 as military secretary to Lord Kitchener, who at that time was commander-in-chief of the British forces in South Africa. He was also military secretary to Lord Kitchener when the latter was commander-in-chief in India.

How Thin People Can Put On Flesh

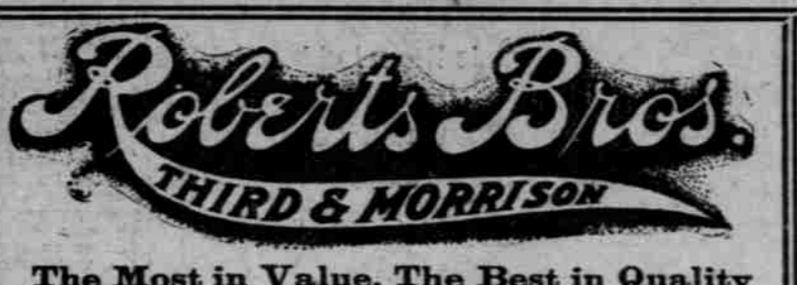

A New Discovery

Thin men and women that big, hearty, filling dinner you eat last night. What became of all the fat-producing nourishment it contained? You haven't gained in weight one ounce. That food passed from your body like unburned coal through an open grate. The material was there, but the food doesn't work and stick, and the plain truth is you haven't set enough nourishment from your meals to use for the cost of cooking. This is true of thin folks the world over. Your nutritive organs, your functions of assimilation, are sadly out of gear and need reconstruction.
