PETROGRAD, Nov. 2 .- (Via London Nov. 7.)—The German advance on War-saw was achieved as a result of that most difficult operation known as a change of front, performed with mar-velous speed and efficiency. The trans-fer of one-fourth of the German army from Belgium to Poland was the least of the difficulties that were overcome. Far greater was the establishment of etapes (shelters) and lines of com-munication in hostile territory. The Germans not only overcame these difficulties but conceived a masterly plan of taking Warsaw and nearly carried it to success

Attack From South Unexpected. Grand Duke Nicholas expected a German advance from East Prussia eastward on Grodno or southward on Warsaw and had prepared for these movements with General Rennen-kampfs' army west of Grodno and another army near Kovno. Warsaw was defended on the north by the fortress of Novogeorgeievsk and a powerful

The Grand Duke did not expect an attack from the south, where there are swamps, the worst wagon roads in Europe and few railways. It was from the south that General Von Morgen came

In all there were four German groups. One from Thorn bombarded Plotsk, but retreated, this being only Plotsk, but retreated, this being only a demonstration. Two groups advanced from Kallsz and Chenstokhov, and, uniting at Skiernevitzy, moved on War-saw with blinding rapidity. The fourth group, from Cracow, attacked Radom and then Ivangorod, where the object was to cross the Vistula, thus out-flanking the Russian army at Warsaw and compelling its retreat.

Austrians Seized Passes.

Meanwhile the Austrians crossed the River San. reoccupied Jaroslaw and selzed all the passes through the Car-pathians south of Przemsyl. The prin-cipal passes are Sanok, Sambor, Stry and Dolina. The Austrians still hold these passes, thus necessitating the presence of a large Russian army in Galicia. The Austrians captured 10,-000 Russians, but the Russians cap-

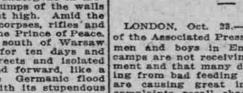

000 Russians, but the Russians cap-tured even more Austrian troops and drove the Austrians across the San River. The whole Austro-German battle front was 462 miles in length, extendi-ing from the Baltic to the Carpathian and, therefore, the battle of the Vis-tula in the middle of October was in some respects the greatest ever fought I confine myself to description of what I saw with my own eyes. South of Warsaw, on October 11, the Russians had 120,000 Siberians. From the south General Von Morgen ad-vanced on Warsaw with 108,000 men consisting of three corps, with Aus-trian cavalry. On October 11 there was an indescribable panle in Warsaw, the Germans being only six miles away and the thunder of their guns shaking the Germans being only six miles away and the thunder of their guns shaking the city. German flashlights Liuminated the Viennese railway station inside of Warsaw.

Warsaw was absolutely lost on the evening of October 11. The Germans had only to walk in and take it. But they delayed, probably waiting for the fourth German force to cross at Ivan-

Next day the Russians had more troops and within a week they had 10 corps, or 400,000 men. south of Warsaw, corps, or 400,000 men, south of Warsaw, and as General von Morgen's force was threatened from both flanks, he fell back October 20, with amazing skill and rapidity, leaving no guns and vir-tually no prisoners. General von Mor-gen's retreat was so swift that the Cossack scouts pursuing him could not find him after he had gone 20 miles. Suddenly the darkness was lit up by a tremendous glare. The Saxons had retreated, setting fire to the village. We were in the center of the flaming area, but the soldier guarding the door refused to let us fetch water from the nume in the yard. Finally, be rethe pump in the yard. Finally he re-lented, as our thirst was intense be-cause of the excitement and the heat. In the vicinity roof after roof fell, great sheets of fire shooting upward, but our house did not catch. Finally the sentinel was ordered to retire. His face was shockingly blis-tored and I believe he would have re-mained at his post until he was roasted. Three Cossacks arrived, questioned
