TRIPLE ALLIANCE CRUSHED BY VOTER

Washington Labor Unions and Farmers' Combination Lose Great Battle.

Originally at 1911 Session of Legislature, Meets Defeat After Long Political Hold.

In the Progressive vote, which was reduced 50 per cent, the outstanding feature of Tuesday's election in this state was the virtual destruction of the combination of State Federation of the combination of th bination of State Federation of Labor State Grange and State Farmers' Unions, which for nearly four years has been one of the chief political factors of Washington.

Aside from securing passage of only one of the "seven sisters" initiative measures, for which the coalition stood sponsor, the organization met striking defeat when Judges S. J. Chadwick, Herman D. Crow and O. R. Holcomb were elected to the Supreme bench. The triple alliance had backed W. H. Pemberton and Edgar G. Mills for the bench and had waged a particularly bitter attack against Judges Chadwick and Crow, who were candidates for re-

The combination of labor and farmers' organizations was effected originally at the 1911 session of the Legislature, when the labor and farmers' lobbies joined forces to work for the initiative, referendum and recall, which both desired, while the farmers' lobbies also supported the workmen's compensation act in return for labor support sation act in return for labor support for grange measures. A few months later the "joint Legislative committee" was organized formally with two members each from the Federation of Labor, Grange, Farmers' Union and Direct Legislation League. The lastnamed organization had its principal existence on paper, having been organized originally some years ago to secure initiative, referendum and recall provisions in city charters.

Merger Most Successful. The combination had remarkable success with its measures at the 1911 Leg-islature. Before the 1913 session was organized the joint Legislative com-mittee secured pledges from a considerable majority of members of both House and Senate to submit a consti-House and Senate to submit a consti-tutional amendment to allow future constitutional amendments to be made by initiative instead of passing through the Legislature. seeds of dissatisfaction were sown by the action of the State Federation of Labor in indorsing, in addition to the "seven sisters," the Socialist eighthour bill, to which the farmers organ-izations were opposed. against the eight-hour bill.

The outcome of the election in the passage of the employment agency bill alone, while the first-aid bill proved strongest of the others, has indicated to the labor men generally that they lost rather than gained strength through their association with the farmers, and a complete split and dissolution of the joint legislative comsolution of the joint legislative committee seems imminent.

The committee has been attempting for some months to pledge candidates for the 1815 Legislature to vote for the constitutional amendment by initiative proposal, but in the election a majority of the candidates who stood for this proposal were defeated.

and the labor organizations also has come about as the result of the initiative campaign. In the middle of the campaign the brewery interest succeeded in securing from the executive committee of the State Federation of Labor a resolution attacking the prohibition bill. In the latter days of the campaign the breweries, in addition to fighting the prohibition law, worked hard against the eight-hour bill, which had been indersed by organized

Three-Cornered Fight Opens. A three-cornered contest has devel-oped for Speaker of the lower house of the Washington Legislature, with W. W. Conner, of Skagit County; E. Heister Guie, of King, and Elmer E. Halsey, of Asotin, as candidates. All are Republicans.
