

FRAUDS FOUND IN RECALL PETITIONS

Grand Jury Investigates, District Attorney Finding Numerous Forgeries.

BLAME ON CIRCULATORS

Some Documents Are Alleged to Be Bogus in Entirety, Others Team With "Faked" Signatures and Few Found to Be All Right.

Wholesale forgeries are alleged to have been found in the petitions filed to bring about the recall of District Attorney Evans. The subject before the Multnomah grand jury. It is not suspected that the recall committee, composed of M. E. Gibson, C. D. Hohlt and A. C. Allen, are guilty of misconduct in obtaining the required number of names, but the theory is that these men were imposed upon by irresponsible circulators.

Many of the petitions filed with City Auditor Barber before the election are said to be palpable forgeries. Some petitions are thought to be 100 per cent forgeries. Others bear many names said to have been altered by the circulators. A number of these names were entirely fictitious and others were names of well-known citizens, who say they did not know their names were being used to further the recall movement.

Jeweler Alleges Forgers. Joseph Jaeger, East Twenty-fourth and Stanton streets, a jeweler, is one of these. Although a strong supporter of Mayor Albee, his name was forged, apparently, to a recall petition, and to add further to his humiliation, the name was misspelled in the petition. A name was misspelled and someone sought to correct it by writing in another letter with a pencil of a different color.

District Attorney Evans and Walter Geran, special agent for the District Attorney's office, have brought interesting facts to light since the petitions were turned over to them by City Attorney La Rouché for grand jury investigation. The circulators in some instances gave false addresses, one woman employed by the committee having given as her residence a number that would be in the middle of the Willamette River, were there any such number.

Addresses Are Vacant Lots. Vacant lots throughout the city were listed on some of the petitions. The addresses of many of the fictitious names signed. In other places names were placed on the lists and residences given which, upon inquiry, were found to be the homes of other persons, who had no knowledge of the persons said to live there.

The errors are attributed to irresponsible circulators accused of taking advantage of the committee. Many of the circulators, however, are in positions without errors. One against which no objections could be placed. The petitions were certified, as required by law, by a notary in the Lumbermen's building. District Attorney Evans says he believes Mr. Heald also has been imposed upon and it is his opinion that he declared Mr. Evans, to say that Mr. Heald is aiding the investigation in every way he can. He has already appeared before the grand jury to state what he knows about the circumstances of the case and offered to return at any time of his own accord.

Names Appear Twice. One petition contained 40 names, the same names being used on three different petitions, and this list appears to be a forgery throughout. Mrs. C. Mair, of 410 Jefferson street, said her name had been forged on all these petitions.

Mrs. W. R. Wiggin, of 737 Clackamas street, declared her husband's name was forged to all three petitions. She said that neither she nor her husband had signed any recall petition. Captain J. Pope, of 441 West Park street, said he signed no petition, although his name, with the correct address, appears. The name of M. Landenkron, battalion chief of the fire department, 244 Multnomah street, appears on a petition, although he says his name was forged to it. A slight resemblance between the signature as it appears on the petition and his signature on his registration card.

48 Circulators Engaged. There were 48 circulators engaged to glean signatures. The grand jury, after a thorough investigation, had, may return indictments against such as are found to have turned in bogus petitions. A charge of perjury may be made against all who swore falsely as to the correctness of the names on their lists, and forgery may be charged. District Attorney Evans said.

Discrepancies Are Many. "One petition contains the following discrepancies: "Joseph Lynch, 299 Salmon street. Mr. Lynch was not known at that address, nor could anyone there give any information about him. "James Brown, 209 1/2 Main street. There is no such number on Main street. "Marcus Burnsgard, 227 Montgomery street. The persons at this address had lived there a number of years and no such person ever lived there. "J. J. Austerly, 224 1/2 Broadway. Detectives could find no number and such number properly would come in a vacant lot. "J. H. McMillan, 192 Second street. No one at this address knows the man. "Another petition circulated by different person contains the following irregularities: "E. Alderman, 254 Front street. Mr. Alderman resides there, but told the detectives that his signature had been forged on the petition. "R. E. Rowe, 419 Second street. Mr. Rowe is not known there and has never lived there. "A. P. Hurst, 446 Second street. The detectives could find no such number on Second street. "B. N. Atwood, 312 Columbia. There

"CAT NAPS" ADVISED BY ACTRESS AS GAY "TONIC"

Minna Gombel, of "A Pair of Sixes," Says Girl Friends Agree on Success of "Forty Winks" for Health and Beauty.

Minna Gombel, in "A Pair of Sixes."

"I KNOW just what I have to thank for my gay spirits," declared charming Minna Gombel, who plays Florence in "A Pair of Sixes." "I have preached it to many of my girl friends, and, after they have tried it, they all vote it a huge success. Perhaps you will smile when I tell you, because I don't remember ever having heard of it before, but I put all my faith on a series of catnaps taken at intervals through the day whenever I have a chance to close my eyes and lie back undisturbed. Of course, to be well and overflowing with good spirits all the time a girl must live a regular life.

"There must be no gaps between things; she must have time for everything and live exactly as she would play a game. For that reason I always divide my day into periods and I never allow any two periods to overlap. The things that I do are, of course, interesting. How could I be happy doing things that were dull or monotonous? But I perform them religiously, so that, to a certain extent, my days are lived in periods of routine exactness.

"And now for my catnaps. After I have finished, say with my period of studying, I allow my thoughts to wander off away from the events of the day for about five or 10 minutes. In short, I take 40 winks, relaxing every muscle and keeping my eyes tightly closed so as not to see my surroundings. Sometimes I can almost drop off for a few minutes, sometimes I am not a bit sleepy, and I just rest, but I always get a great deal of comfort, for my mind isn't accustomed to routine work, and when it is scrambling around in the short breathing spaces that I allow at different times during the day it is searching out new material in which to take an interest."

SKATING STYLES DIFFER

SMALL FIGURES IN LIMITED SPACE NO LONGER ADMIRRED.

Louis M. Roswell, instructor at Portland rink, says Dances Are Graceful and Not Difficult.

Louis M. Roswell, former instructor at the St. Nicholas ice rink in New York City, who holds the same position at the local ice hippodrome, thinks that the old style of ice skating will soon be a thing of the past.

"The old style of skating popular in the United States up until a few years ago," said Mr. Roswell yesterday, "was confined to the execution of small figures in a limited space. In these small movements there predominated jerky movements and kicks. They were usually performed on an outdoor lake or pond. In those days the person who made the most difficult tracing, or prettiest markings on the ice was considered the best skater, without regard to the strained position or awkward postures assumed in making these figures. However, since the coming of artificial ice this style has changed.

"The new and artistic figure skating consists of long sweeping sustained curves and glides with the body held in perfect poise and graceful balance. To see this illustrated by some of the modern skaters is to see the finest picture of physical grace so far produced by any sport in the world.

"The modern dancing on skates which has created a sensation in all of the large cities of America and Europe will instantly appeal to every one, particularly women, for they are truly at their best in the graceful art of skating.

"It is a common sight now in any of the large Eastern rinks to see as many as 12 or 14 couples waiting, two-step or tangoing on the ice.

"Any person who comes to a skating proper instruction should be able to learn some of these dances in a short time."
