WASHINGTON TO GET SAFE, SANE LAWS

Almost Every Member of Legislature Owes Election to Economy Platform.

BUDGET TO BE HELD DOWN

Attorney-General Offers to Draft Bills Proposed by Legislators to Prevent Necessity of Interpretations by Courts.

OLYMPIA, Wash., Nov. 21.—(Special.) -If the announced plans of state of ficials and of legislative leaders go into effect, the Fourteenth Washington Legislature, which convenes here Janugry 11, 1915, will be noted for three things, in startling contrast with previous Legislatures of recent years. These will be an economical programme as to appropriations, a comparatively small number of new laws and prac-tically none of freakish tendencies, and carefully-drafted measures to and carefully-drafted measures to avoid later legal complications.

The Legislature of 1913 passed appropriation bills which exceeded by several millions of dollars, the highwater mark of previous sessions, despite free use of the veto power by Governor Lister. A considerable portion of the increases were unavoidable. As to how many were unnecessary no two critics agree, but the impression two critics agree, but the impression among the voters of the state follow-ing the session was that the Legisla-ture was the most extravagant on record. In consequence practically record. In consequence practically every legislative candidate this year ran on an economy platform. Repub-lican leaders have announced since the election their intention of seeing that these pre-election promises are compiled with strictly, and as Governor Lister has relterated his intention of using the veto again if appropriations pass a reasonable limit, there seems but little doubt that the state treasury will be guarded carefully.

Budget to Be Presented. For the first time a budget outlining the combined requests of the various state departments will be presented to the coming Legislature. Although some departments will ask for increased appropriations the state officials will be able to point out that the Legislature may have no fear that such appropri-ations will lead to extravagance. About $1,000,000 of the amount appropriated by the last Legislature will be re-turned at the end of the present bi-ennium. Of this amount $200,000 is money not needed for initiative and referendum expenses, $280,000 excess appropriations for the purchase of jute for the penitentiary bag mill, and $30. 000, the unused appropriation for the exchange of state lands in National forests. The remaining $500,000 represents a flat saving from the amounts appropriated in the actual conduct of state offices and institutions during the present biennum. While the departments will ask sufficient appropriations to meet any possible emergen-cies, they promise to make similar re-turn at the end of the next biennium. The defeat of all but two of the initiative and referendum measures submitted at the recent election is taken generally as an indication that the voters are not clamoring this year for a flood of new laws. Among the more important subjects that will come before the Legislature are a "first aid." or medical attendance amendment to the compensation act, establishment of vocational training as a part of the merous recommendations, but these concern principally amendments of ex-isting laws to make them more readily workable. Freak Laws Unlikely. composition of the Legislature, which is strikingly conservative, is a virtual guarantee that it will be a bad year for freak measures. Two features of the membership of the coming session are of the number of sub-stantial business and professional men, coming as new members, and the number of seasoned veterans returning to political life after an absence of many political life after an absence of many years.

Governor Lister and Attorney-General Tanner have been co-operating for several months in an effort to have measures intended for enactment prepared in proper form. All departments under the Governor some months ago prepared their proposed measures, and the Attorney-General's office has drafted the bills in proper legal phrase-ology. Attorney-General Tanner now is offering the same service of drafting bills to members-elect of the Legislature, and during the session plans on duty to continue this work. The object of these preparations is to have such measures as are enacted in proper such measures as are enacted in proper form, in an effort to reduce to a minimum the work of the Attorney-General's office and of the courts in attempting to interpret its enactments after adjournment of the Legislature.

The loosely-drawn form of many of the day. The loosely-drawn form of many of the statutes has been a source of much trouble in past years and the courts have not yet decided all the points of difficulty arising from the 1913 ses-

Weller, who has a family residing at Vancouver, became infatuated with Mrs. Eva Earll, a widow employed in a downtown hotel, but Mrs. Earll is said to have refused to accept his affections. About 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon Mrs. Earll told Captain of Detectives Baty Weller visited her and declared his love for her. She requested him to leave, and Weller went to a drug store, where he obtained a bottle of carbolic acid, saying he wanted it to use in cleaning a bird cage. Weller then engaged a room in a Park-street hotel. He wrote two letters, one being a farewell note to Mrs. Earll and the other was a letter to his lodge.

Fearful lest Weller attempt suicide Mrs. Earll summoned Detectives Tichenor and J. Moloney. The officers en

The result means that persons convicted of murder in Oregon cannot be hanged as a penalty for their crimes.

District attorneys and prosecuting officers in the state alprosecuting officers in the state al-ready have initiated the practice of charging persons accused of homicide with murder in the second degree, for which the penalty may be fixed at life It is probable that the next Legis-lature will fix the penalty for murder in the first degree at life imprisonment.
