Bulletin on School and Home Gardens Lauds Portland.

O. A. C. BOOK IS ISSUED

M. O. Evans, Jr., Former Local Instructor, Author, Bases Work on Success He Had in This City. Nine Don'ts Are Listed.

The Extension Service of the Oregon Agricultural College has prepared bulletin on "School and Home Gardening" that gives an account of the success of school gardens in Portland. The bulletin, which was prepared by M. O. Evans, Jr., is indorsed by J. A. Churchill, Superintendent of Public In-struction. In his message to teachers Mr. Churchill says:

"The school garden work has been so attractively, and yet so definitely planned in this pamphlet, that I take pleasure in recommending it to you as your guide for that work. Every industrial club undertaking the garden contest should use this pamphlet as a basis for study, and all pupils interested in school and home gardens should be made familiar with its con-

Plea for Gulde Made. The bulletin was issued by the col-lege in response to a large number of inquiries for something which would be of assistance to schools throughout be of assistance to schools throughout the state, largely as a result of the extensive work done in Portland. Mr. Evans was director and supervisor of school and home garden work in Portland for the seasons 1913-1914. Now he is assistant state leader of co-operative farm demonstration work, with headquarters in Corvallis.

From the first page to the last line the book is full of helpful suggestions, given from the viewpoint of one who knows the work in a practical way and who was eminently successful. The front cover of the builtin shows the little Kenton garden in 1913. Fifteen other cuts show various gardens in different stages of growth. The whole is an interesting advertisement for Portan interesting advertisement for Portland, as the little book will find distribution all over this state, and in many other states which have made inquiries as to the system used in Portland.

Seven diagrams suggest plans for arranging various areas of ground. Ground preparation and fertilizers, treatment of sod and home gardens suitable for young gardeners are explained. On one page is found a home garden report which shows the profits that a lad may make by cultivating his own back yard or a vacant lot. On this subject Mr. Evans writes: Young Gardeners Guided.

enly waste them and make more thinning necessary.

Don't be in too great a hurry to plant your seed. You will rain time by thoroughly pulverising the soil before planting.

Don't be afraid to thin out the young plants. It is better to waste three-fourths of them, if necessary, and give the other one-fourth a chance to grow.

Don't water your earden every time it looks a little dry on top. Even in dry weather a good sonking every third evening will be sufficient. Frequent applications of water cause the little roots to stay near the surface, where they quickly dry out when the hot weather comes on.

In addition to hints for practical when the hot weather comes on.

In addition to hints for practical vegetable gardens, there are suggestions for flower beds and Assistant Professor A. L. Lovett has added notes on garden pests. "Bird visitors to Our Gardens" are considered by Professor G. F. Sykes, of the department of zoology, who gives complete descriptions of birds, that they may be easily recognized by young gardeners.

The bulletins of the Oregon Agricultural College are sent free to all residents of Oregon who request them

Kansas Steps Recounted.

"Kansas now has absolutely prohibited the sale of liquor" said Mr Brock. "For ten years the law was evaded in one town and obeyed in the last ten years, the prohibitory law has been enforced successfully from one end of the state to the other.

Mr. Brock said that Kansas permitted the use of liquor in the private home, but it had to be imported. Its sale or use in public places was prohibited absolutely. He said it was true the Kansas Supreme Court had been somewhat liberal in interpreting the Kansas prohibitory statutes, but he added that the people had overwhelmingly supported the justices. He told how saloons had turned into "drugstores" over night, and explained how this situation had now been made absolutely impossible. Possession of a Federal

"The great trouble in Kansas was that people blamed the officials and not the law in early days. Then, when they saw their error and changed the law there was no further trouble."

"Did Kansas' going dry cause business depression?" asked one member.

"None at all," replied the speaker.

"Beer powders" and similar evasions of the liquor law were all covered by the Kansas statutes, the speaker said. He concluded:

Few Americans Mistreated. Professor McCann left Berlin for Belut on August 2. Travel through Germany and Austria was alow, he says. The Germans, he says, were bitter against English but very friendly to Americans. He believes that Americans have been mistreated in only a few cases.

Professor McCann speaks strongly

Professor McCann speaks strongly against the "spoils system." as applied to the American Consular service. The present service, he says, is a joke among the people of Europe. "You must remember," he says, "that America and Americans are made fun of by Europeans. American diplomacy is a laughing stock. Our citizens are not protected as those of other nations are. Our Consuis do not do their work as they ought. If you are in some half-civilized country and are in danger from the natives, it is far safer to tell them that you are an Englishman.
