Sir Cecil let it be known the British government has not taken a position of unfriendilness toward the possible candidacy of Villa for the Mexican presidency. It is understood that Eng-land will not undertake to pass upon the right of any individual to aspire to the leadership in Mexico. That, however, does not mean that any in-demuity for the death of the British subject, Benton, would not be demand-ed from Villa should he become presi-dent, or from whoever may ultimately dent, or from whoever may ultimately be settled in that office.
