

To Seek - To Strive To Find - And Not To Yield - Tribute to Captain Robert Scott and Companions, of South Polar Expedition.

The Western Spirit, by William Stever... The pleasant town of Astoria, Or. has a new Western poet as one of its citizens...

It's the tramp of herds of cattle... And the war whoop of the battle... It's the patriotic passion... And expanded with the wideness of the world.

Find the democracy, tenderness, and strong action of these selections: O Astoria, my pride... Methinks I see a lone man... And suns they rise and suns they set...

My flowers! You see that mound over there covered so snug and warm with burlap and sack? There my tulips and hyacinths sleep...

"This was my grandmother's oven. All her bread she baked in this little brick stove. Black bread it was, with a great thick crust, and a bitter taste..."

"You should but see the children peering over the fence to see my flowers in the summer," she said. The blue eyes shone brightly...

"These are my poppies. Did you ever dream of poppies in the morning to find a hundred poppy faces smiling at you, and swaying and glistening and rippling in the wind..."

"We used to come out here in the early morning, my little Schwester and I, to see which rose had unfolded its petals..."

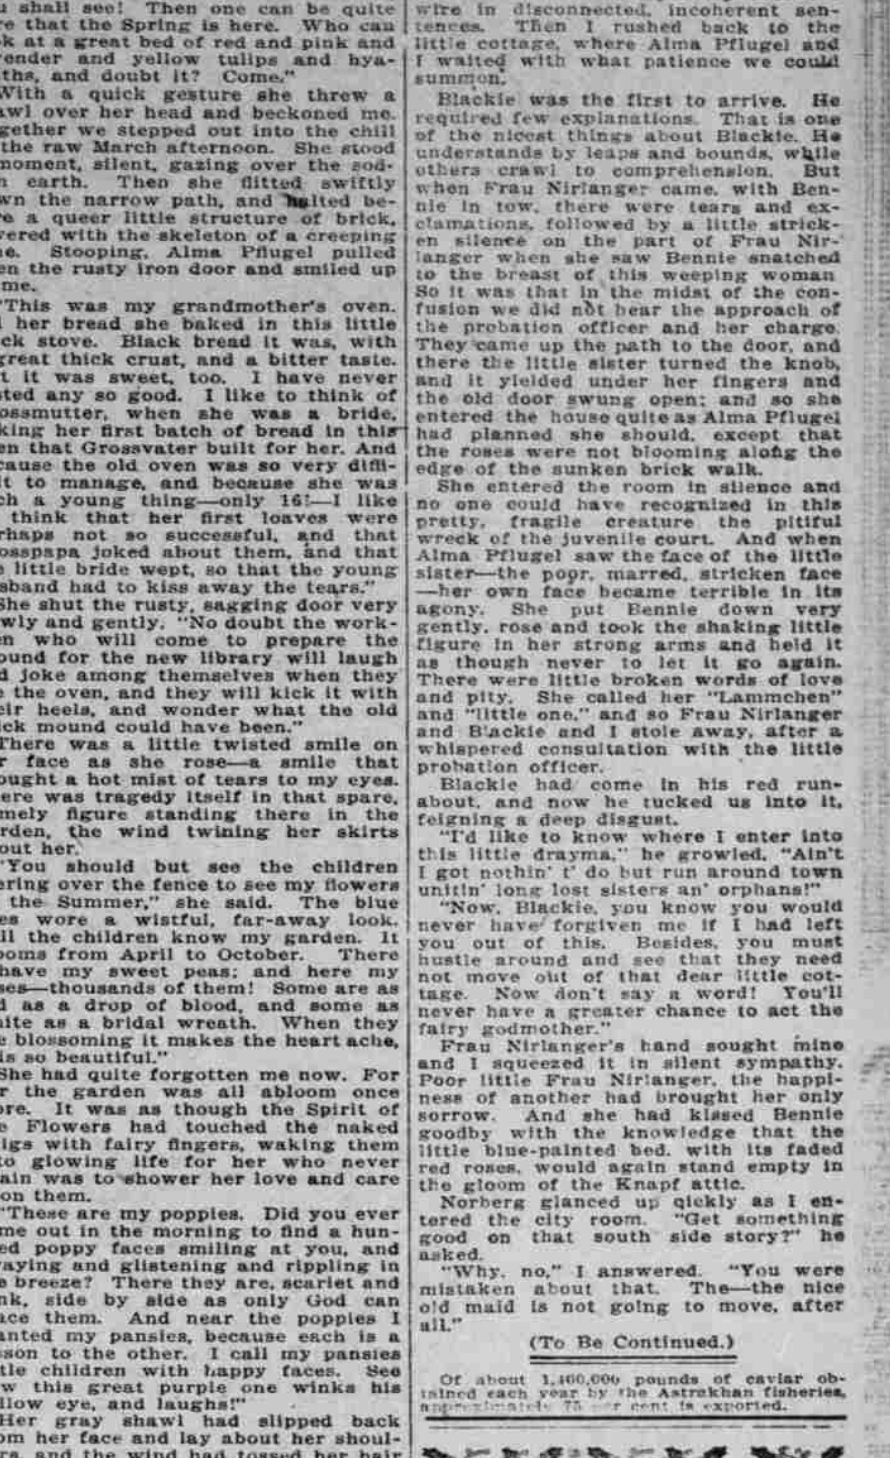

"All the way up the path to the door she went, all in an aisle of fragrance, and when she turned the corner of the old door she found it unlocked..."

"She stopped abruptly. The light died out of her face. She glanced at me, but she turned away quickly, as if she were not quite sure of what she had said..."

"I thought of the cheap little Mat, with the heavy arm. 'Indeed, indeed, do understand.'" I whispered...

"Do that again!" I cried, and shook Alma Pfugel sharply by the shoulder. "Do that again! Do that again!"

"Where is she? Take me to her. Ach, you are sure-sure? 'Lords, I hope so! Come, you must let me help you into the house. And where is the nearest telephone? Never mind! I'll find one.'" When I had succeeded in finding the
