Instead of gaining 156 votes in the first 11 precincts of Multnomah County, as promised in his petition for a recount of the ballots, ex-Sheriff Word lost one vote and Sheriff Hurlburt instead of losing 121 votes, as his opponent had predicted, gained four, as League, Alice R. Nugent, of the Women's Good Government Club; Mrs. Lyle Mills, judge in Precinct No. 8; Mrs. Margaret Becker, of Precinct No. 7; Miss Helen Aldrich, of Precinct No. 5; and Mrs. C. P. Benedict, of Precinct No. 7, were the women visitors at the recount hearing yesterday.

One Elector Votes for Both. Peculiarities in all the ballots were noticed by the clerks, judges and attorneys who handled them. Not a few voters had cast their vote on only one candidate or measure, leaving the rest of the huge "blanket ballot" blank. Of these most had voted on the prohibition measure and left the rest of the sheet without a scratch. One absolutely blank ballot was found, and even the magnifying glass of Judge Kavanaugh could not find an expression of opinion on it.

One worthy citizen had cast a vote for both Mr. Hurlburt and Mr. Word. "That's one voter who kept his promises," remarked Attorney Markey.

It was noticed, too, that every voter seemed to have a decided opinion on the prohibition question. Whether the vote was for or against this measure, the elector in every case had borne hard on the pencil and had left a mark which the judges could not doubt.

COUNTING DISPUTED BALLOTS IN WORD-HURLBURT SHRIEVALTY ELECTION CONTEST.

SCENE IN CIRCUIT JUDGE KAVANAUGH'S COURTROOM DURING RECOUNT HEARING.

a result of rulings on disputed ballots in these precincts by Circuit Judge Kavanaugh yesterday.

Many women who served on election boards in various of the precincts will be present at the recount hearing Monday to learn the reason for the charges of gross errors in counting made in ex-Sheriff Word's complaint. Six women attended the hearing yesterday, and among them was Mrs. Lydia Mills, a judge in Precinct 8, who was anxious to find out about the 47 disputed ballots in that precinct. The accuracy of her board was vindicated when it was shown that Judge Kavanaugh's rulings made a difference of only 12 votes in the official count. Mr. Word had alleged an error of 25 votes in this board's counting.

The first 11 precincts, after the recount, were: Hurlburt 1025, Word 633. The official count was, Hurlburt 1031, Word 634. According to Mr. Word's recount, the vote should have been Hurlburt 997, Word 644.

Three Votes Doubtful. The 11 precincts are complete except for three ballots, one in the Second, one in the Tenth and one in the Eleventh. These were so doubtful that Judge Kavanaugh asked more time in which to rule on them. Two of these had been cast for Mr. Hurlburt and one for Mr. Word.

The first one of these ballots still in dispute bore a "sticker" with the name L. C. Garrigue for County Judge. Garrigue, who intends to contest the legality of Judge Cleton's incumbency in this office, had sent these stickers about to be written on the ballots. This vote had been cast for Mr. Hurlburt, and was disputed by the Word attorneys on grounds that the "sticker" constituted a distinguishing mark.

The second ballot still in dispute had been cast for Mr. Word. It was a name of Senator Chamberlain for United States Senator had been written in on this ballot, although the name was already printed there. The third disputed ballot was badly marked up. "This voter had scratched out with a pencil the name of each candidate he did not want to vote for. He had laid much emphasis on his shrievalty vote, for beyond putting a cross opposite Mr. Hurlburt's name, had scratched out Mr. Word's name and written after it a darkly emphatic "No!"

Freak Votes Encountered. Other freak ballots came to light during the hard day's work, and Judge Kavanaugh emphasized on his shrievalty where the voter's intentions were plain and where the distinguishing characteristics of the ballot did not look suspicious.

In Precinct No. 1, a ballot was thrown out because the voter, thankful that a laborious task was finished, had written "A-men" at the bottom of the ballot.

Some time was consumed in the morning in getting started. The undisputed ballots had all been counted during the week, and Judge Kavanaugh himself presided over the Saturday session, at which the disputed votes were to be decided. Of so many varying shades of doubtful ballots that the first two or three occupied two hours of the court's time while the attorneys argued pro and con. Once a ruling was established on a certain identifying mark, however, and neither attorney could object later if, on another disputed ballot, he had to switch sides and argue from the opposite point of view.

Quicker Results Expected. During the afternoon the counting went on faster, and as the court's position on the doubtful votes became clear during the many sessions to come, it is predicted that the recount will move faster.

of whom were acquainted with Miss Dimick's work.

Mr. Groat had occasion to observe her work in the schools closely, and he declared Miss Dimick was wholly devoted to the business of teaching and that her energies and life were absorbed by the school. Mr. Groat gave a resume of the progress of the Portland schools and said that the city schools became a city school system in the Autumn of 1874. She taught what was then called the sixth grade, but which is now called the first grade. Miss Dimick's work, therefore, started at the time the city system was organized.

First School Survey Made. "The community must have been much interested in school matters," said Mr. Groat, "and not well pleased with the schools, for in May, 1874, the board of directors appointed Rev. G. H. Atkinson to examine the various departments of the public schools. This was our first school survey; our second one was a year and a half ago. Dr. Atkinson's report is interesting. He said, 'A spirit of obedience and good order prevails in all the schools, commendable to teacher and pupil. First, quality not quantity has evidently been the motto of the instructors.'"

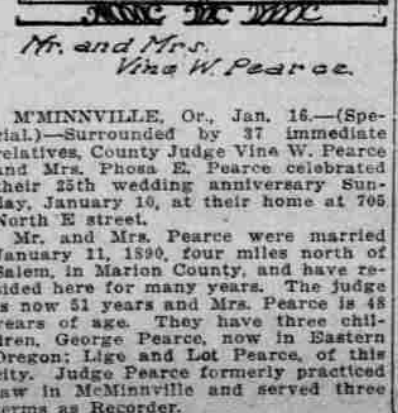

Into this educational atmosphere came Miss Dimick, an alert, ambitious 15-year-old girl. It is easily seen that her whole career was influenced thereby. Miss Dimick had taught one-fourth of a year before entering the work here. During her first term (now the Harrison-street school (now Shattuck), she taught the sixth B, enrolled 50 pupils; 33 were present at the end of the term, of whom 27 were promoted into the sixth A, or what we now call the first B. There were only three schools then in Portland, Central, Harrison Street and North.

Miss Dimick Becomes Principal. "Ten years later we find Miss Dimick teaching in the second grade (our eighth) in the Central school at a salary of $900 a year. When I came to Portland 25 years ago Miss Dimick was vice-principal of the Park school (now Ladd). In 1898 she was appointed principal of the Holladay school and transferred to the Brooklyn school September, 1898.

"So far as I know, she never asked to be transferred from here. Your children were her children and her whole life and thought were devoted to their welfare and betterment."

Mrs. Barlow Wilkins, who had been associated with Miss Dimick for many years, speaking of her school said: "I was charmed with her personality, her vivacity, wit and independence and, above all, for the ardent love she expressed for her school work. To help others was a grand characteristic of Miss Dimick. I do not think she ever appreciated an unspoken and forgotten. I have never forgotten what she

HOW BUNGALOW ROSE ON LOT BEFORE KNOT WAS TIED IS TOLD.

Youth, With Sweetheart's Aid, Buys Lumber and Builds Own Home in Which to Make Start.

PORTLAND, Jan. 16.—(To the Editor.)—To illustrate what can be done, even in these hard times, I wish to call attention to the following:

A young man and his sweetheart had been "keeping company" for three years. He had a lot 50 by 100 feet partly paid for, a job paying $65 a month, and as he wished to "have something laid up before marriage, was putting aside as much as possible each month.

Finally the young man lost his job and soon afterward got a position which involved night work. He decided that if he had the lumber he could work during a part of the day in building a house in which he and his sweetheart could make a start in life.

Figuring closely, the young couple decided they could do their own planning and make a suitable house. At last they determined to build a three-room bungalow, and ordered the foundation timbers. The young man then graded the lot, made the foundation, laid the floor, raised the frame, put on the roof and shingled it and put in the tin all alone.

A friend helped him put in the fireplace and chimney and his father-in-law helped him dig a cesspool. The plumbing and plastering work was hired out, but the prospective husband did the finishing, painting and staining himself. Now the little bungalow is complete with carpets, linoleum, kitchen.

High downtown rents and the fact that with lower expenses Mr. Golden believes he can give his customers a change of price. "The time for a change has come," said Mr. Golden yesterday. "Out in Alberta we will be able to give better value for the same money because I will have no rent to pay and smaller overhead expenses."—From Evening Telegram, January 5, 1915.

SEWER BID IS FAVORED

Mr. Dieck to Recommend Award on Willow-Street Extension.

City Commissioner Dieck will recommend the awarding of a contract to William Lind for the construction of the Willow-street sewer. Mr. Lind submitted a bid of $148,929.13 for the contract. This was about $5000 lower than the next lowest bid, that submitted by the firm of Gleibich & Joplin.

It is said the prices quoted for this contract are by far the lowest secured by the city for sewer work in many years. This is due, it is said, to a rate fight between Gleibich & Joplin and William Lind. Bids for the work were received on three different occasions, but were rejected each time for irregularities. The present bid of William Lind is about $25,000 lower than the lowest bid submitted the first time bids were called for and about $18,000 lower than the lowest submitted the second time.
