PORTLAND MAN AND DAUGHTER WHOM HE ATTEMPTED TO RESCUE IN RUNAWAY, OVEREXERTING INDIRECTLY CAUSING HIS DEATH.

Phillip Goldstein.

Detective Hawley, in linen duster and sombrero hat (the guise of a hobo), drove 18 miles into the country and found this girl, attired in a man's clothes, picking hops. She had been reported missing and Hawley had been put on the case. She was brought tearfully back to Portland, but the man with whom she had run away disappeared. He was not desired back and no search for him was instituted.

had to her identity was that she traveled with her baby and a nurse. The police officer, however had failed to find her in this city. That was on a Thursday. The following Saturday night he had located the woman, selecting her from several thousand other women with babies and nurses that might be found in the city.

Detective Hawley Solved. On the sixth of next month, Hawley will be 61 years old. He was born in New York and followed the milling trade for many years. He gave up his work when he was employed at the paper mills at Oregon City because of bronchial trouble which he contracted in the service of Portland 15 years next July. He was placed on the police department under the regime of Mayor Fisher.
