This is absolutely true, as I find from sores of released prisoners and from people who have made an examination of the camps. There was a splendid little incident which came up about a week ago, of which little was made in the papers, but which I thought unusual.

Raoul Dovidot, a prisoner from Moulins, got word that his mother was desperately ill, mainly from worry, and that nothing would save her unless she could see him. Dovidot wrote to the Kaiser himself, promising to return before March I if he could get permission to see his mother. The permission was granted. He was escorted to Lindau and set free.

Toward Beigium they seem to have a grudge. They say that Beigium has deliberately and falsely besmirched their good name before the world. I don't know anything that makes a German madder than to whisper the word "atrocities."
