

SURRENDER OF SEVEN HOSTILE INDIAN CHIEFS DUE TO MINISTER KNOWN AS REDMEN'S FRIEND

Oregon Historical Society Has Picture of Father De Smet and Tribesmen He Induced to Give Up to General Harney in Days When Few White Men Could Go About Safely Among Tribes of Northwest, as Did Pastor Who Preached Doctrine of Peace.

FATHER DESMET AND THE SEVEN HOSTILE CHIEFS OF THE UPPER COLUMBIA INDIANS WHO SURRENDERED TO GENERAL HARNEY AT FORT VANCOUVER IN 1836.

IN THE wild frontier days of the '40s and '50s it was an unusual man who could get along with the Indians. No man in the history of that period had such great success along that line as Rev. P. J. Desmet, who arrived in Oregon Territory in 1840, and in the years that followed became known as a friend of the Indians. He was known as Father Desmet. His influence among the Indians was great throughout the Pacific Northwest and he went about among the tribes with perfect immunity from harm. He was largely influential in keeping the tribes not only friendly to the white men but also friendly to each other. In 1836 he accomplished the remarkable task of getting seven hostile chiefs of the Upper Columbia region to surrender to General William S. Harney, United States Army, at Fort Vancouver. The surrender came after a long siege and much trouble between the Indians and the whites. In a historic picture now in the possession of the Oregon Historical Society there are shown Father Desmet and the seven chiefs who figured in early Indian wars and in the surrender at Fort Vancouver. Seated from left to right in the picture are Ai-ma-ken, or the Happy Man, head chief of the Lower Kallispets; Ca-nacht-ketchin, or the Man Without

CARRIERS OF THE OREGONIAN WHO WON EXPOSITION TRIPS SEE ALL

Boys Are Busy Throughout Visit and Find Time to Take Ride to Top of Mount Tamalpais and Make Tour of San Francisco—Mrs. Dunway Having Busy Time.

BY ANNE SHANNON MONROE. REGON BUILDING, Panama-Pacific International Exposition, July 17.—(Special.)—I have come to the conclusion that all the middle-aged people had better just stay at home and dance, and send the old folks and the young folks to the big exposition; for the old folks in their wheel chairs don't miss a thing, and the young ones—particularly the Oregonian young ones, as exemplified by the Oregonian carriers who won prize trips to San Francisco in the recent contest—see everything worth while and carry away notebooks and brains full of fair impressions. I said to one of the Oregonian boys, "Well, we'll have to have some social returns for you chaps—dancing and all that sort of thing"; and with one breath they came back: "We haven't time; we've got to see the fair!"

and she says it's the best of them all. She didn't have to work her way to this one. She is the distinguished guest of the Oregon Commission, and she says she's treated like a queen. Miss Constance Piper and Miss Ruth Gatch, of Berkeley, were guests of Mrs. Charles A. Gray, Oregon's hostess, at the New Jersey ball. The children of the various official families of the exposition were guests at a dance in the Ohio building given by Commissioner Miller, of Ohio.

Portland People Visitors. Portland visitors of the past few days were: George C. Earley, A. M. Harris, Jennie Golden, S. P. Lester, Mrs. Forrest Fisher, J. D. Mills, M. Kehrl, Ruth Kiernan, Bertha Teusch, Augustus Hison, James Jordan, Jack Montgomery, Charles R. Rosenkrans, Mr. and Mrs. F. A. Rosenkrans, Jim Brady, Mrs. A. H. Weber, Cora E. De Lin, Mae E. Woods, Mrs. Harry Nicol, Mrs. J. Sherman O'Gorman, Mrs. M. Williams and family, Mrs. Della Burbank McCaskey, Anna Lautenslager, Ben Bigelow, Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Bigelow, Mrs. H. A. Smith, Mrs. D. A. Aronson, Mr. and Mrs. M. M. Gerkeberg, Mary Mrs. D. J. McKenzie, Mrs. Carlos K. Ullrich, O. Prendergast, Mrs. Carlos K. Ullrich, Mrs. Laura B. Greenfield, George Greenfield, Irving Denzel, V. C. Loucorno, W. R. H. Hainlip, Elleen Magee.

Nothing is Mised. The whole party of prize winners haven't missed a trick in the trip, and they are still all steam on for more worlds to conquer. By name they are Augustus Hixon, Andreas Albrecht, James Jordan, Oron Lear, Joe Trowbridge, Alton Rice, William L. Johnson, Jack Montgomery; and chaperoning the party are C. S. Barton, circulation manager and his wife, Mr. and Mrs. Barton. There never was a finer bunch of boys on earth; unless it's the rest of the 300 carriers of The Oregonian that couldn't come; the only trouble with Mr. Barton's trip is that he didn't have every blessed one of them along.

Mrs. Dunway Entertaining. About the youngest person in the Oregonian party is Mrs. Laura Scott Dunway, who divides her time between seeing the exposition in a wheel chair, attending functions, making speeches by seat, and entertaining a visiting group who love to listen to her stories of earlier days. Eighty years makes a nice long vista to look back over. One of Mrs. Dunway's funniest stories was about being appointed Commissioner from Oregon to the Centennial in Philadelphia. The men appointed with salary and all expenses, and one woman, Mrs. Dunway, sans salary, sans expenses, sans everything but the high honor of being a woman commissioner at the first great exposition of the world's history.

Pair is Reheated. At Wallula she stopped, engaged a hall, billed the town and reaped another little harvest. Then she set out on the new little railway train with the engineer to Walla Walla, where another meeting helped out the bank account. From there she staged to Winnemucca, where she got a train the rest of the way, and reached Philadelphia in time to represent her state most royally at the big fair.
