

LOWER KALAMA RIVER.
Photo By E. A. Gifford.

PARADISE for fishermen and camping parties can be found along almost any of the beautiful tributaries that pour into the Columbia River from the north. The Kalama River has been for a number of years famous among these streams, and many camping parties spend the Summer annually along it. A striking characteristic of the Kalama River is the limpidness and coldness of its waters, and popular tradition has it that hunters will pass any number of wayside springs when they know they are approaching this river, preferring its cold waters to any other drink.