GOLF CHAMPION WRITES OF DREADED STALENESS

Harry Vardon Says Prevention Is Better Than Cure and Rigorous Moderation in Play Has Saved Him Many Times.

BY HARRY VARDON. STALENESS is just about the most distressing complaint that can be visited upon the golfer. In other games the person who is suffering from an excess of play or training is put out of his agony quickly, he is so much off color that it takes very little time to recover. But his ailment is long-drawn-out to the point of being torturous; it takes over two hours to play a round of the links, and when he is really stale the chances are that he hits hardly one good shot all that while. He goes on struggling desperately, for his ailment is long-drawn-out to the point of being torturous; it takes over two hours to play a round of the links, and when he is really stale the chances are that he hits hardly one good shot all that while.

It is a good thing to keep in touch with one's clubs while avoiding the danger of too much play. It is the way that golf is possible all the year round in Britain that amounts in a large measure, I think, for the superiority of British golf over American golf taken in the volume. There are several exceedingly fine players in the States, but I would say that there is only one scratch man for every 10 that are to be found in the United Kingdom, and the reason is probably that the majority of Americans are compelled by circumstances of climate to play some alterations in their routine each year. The schools that are becoming so popular are capable of doing much to overcome this handicap.

For the busy man who can spare only a week's holiday it is probably useless to prescribe moderation. Seeing that he has so many interests as to be weary of the very sight of his clubs, the game, it will not matter greatly even though he does contract staleness. The chances are that it will disappear before he has another opportunity of applying himself to recreation. For people who play more or less regularly and whose experience has taught them to be wary of the very sight of his clubs, the game, it will not matter greatly even though he does contract staleness.

NEW COURSE SPORTY

Strangers Expected to Have Hard Time at Gearhart.

EASTERN CRACKS INVITED

Professional Has Negotiated 36 Holes in 75 and Members' Record is 78, but Narrowness Requires Unusual Accuracy.

BY WILL G. MACRAE. GEARHART, Or., Aug. 21.—(Special.)—"Keep your eye on the ball." That is what they are doing at Gearhart. "Everybody's Doing It" for they are getting into form for the sixth annual Gearhart Golf tournament, which begins Monday.

Golfers at the coming tournament will battle for the 1915 championship over a new 36-hole course and as the new links are sporty, those entrants who are unfamiliar with the new conditions are apt to meet up with a cropper the first day in the qualifying rounds.

Course Difficult at First. The 1915 championship over the new course promises to furnish many surprises and those who have been at hand and have played over the ground will have a decided advantage over those who play over the links the first time Monday. It has always been admitted by golfers who played over the Gearhart course when it had only 18 holes that while none of the hazards was difficult to negotiate, the usual observer to be equally as fast, are surprising slow. Added to all this is the narrowness of the course. The rollers, by the way, are those who do not play close golf from the tee-off until the last hole is made, is more than apt to find his ball out of bounds.

HERO'S PARENTS HERE

BOSTON'S 25-YEAR-OLD TWIRLER TAKES 2-0 CONTEST.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles T. Nehf, of Terre Haute, Proud of Record of Son Making Good in Big Leagues.

There were two mighty proud people in Portland yesterday. They were Mr. and Mrs. Charles T. Nehf, of Terre Haute, Indiana, and the reason their faces beamed was the fact that their year-old son, Arthur N. Nehf, broke into the big leagues by pitching a 2-to-0 victory for the Boston world's champion over the Pittsburgh Nationals yesterday.
