

A FEMININE ROUGH RIDER AT THE ROUND-UP

DARING feats of horsemanship at the Pendleton Roundup are by no means confined to cowboys and other experts who appear in the contests of skill. Girl riders, who are equally at home on horseback, vie with the men in providing thrills for the thousands of spectators who fill the big arena at each recurring Roundup. This picture shows a typical "cowgirl" astride an outlaw horse, who is doing his best to unseat his rider. Such plunging, untamed steeds will be seen in their mad attempts to free themselves from the restraints of bit and bridle at this year's Roundup, September 23-25. No contests attract more attention than the rivalry of girl riders, who strive for the highest honors in riding wild horses, and their daring is not a whit less than that displayed by the cowboys who gather each Fall to match their skill in frontier sports.
