The Story of a Pioneer, by Dr. Anna H. Shaw. Illustrated, Harper & Bros., New York.

Dr. Anna H. Shaw, preacher, physician and publicist, is a woman of strong likes and dislikes. She has been called "the stormy petrel of American suffrage."

Portland people had an opportunity recently to judge Dr. Shaw, when she addressed a meeting at the International Christian Church, on which occasion her address was characterized by mildness of utterance.

"The Story of a Pioneer," with collaboration of Elizabeth Jordan, is Dr. Shaw's personal, intimate story of her busy life from cradle days. The book is written with luminous humor and frankness, and is one of the big books in the feminist movement of 1915.

"The Story of a Pioneer," an English woman's birth, Dr. Shaw is an English woman, born in 1847, and her mother brought her to this country when she, Anna, was four years old. Her father had gone ahead to prepare a home for her, ultimately in—at that time—a wild section of the Michigan woods.

When night came, the woods became alive with night creatures. Wild cats crept like lost children and wolves howled and prowled about the diamonds met the Shaw children and this incident was considered disturbing.

Dr. Shaw's first sermon was preached in a schoolhouse. After attending Albion College, she began a theological course at Boston University.
