RUTH ST. DENIS FOUND IN DAYS OF CHERRY SISTERS

George W. Lederer Tells in Magazine How He "Discovered" Dancer, Whose Mother Declared Her Daughter Wanted to Wear Short Skirts.

Ruth St. Dennis in One of Her Dances

GEOERGE W. LEDERER, who has "discovered" more persons "hit" than almost any other theatrical man, tells in an article in the Green Book magazine, how he found Ruth St. Dennis and made her a star over night. It was along in 1894 when the Cherry Sisters were the sensation of the day. Two women, one young, the other middle-aged, and both showing every evidence of rural residence, came to his office.

"I surveyed them amazedly for a moment," writes Mr. Lederer, "and then, taking myself in hand as best I could, I inquired what I could do for them. The elder said: 'I'm Mrs. Dennis, and this is my daughter, Ruth St. Dennis. We live in Somerville, New Jersey.' 'Yes,' I said, encouragingly. She coughed nervously. 'My daughter Ruth wants to go on the stage,' she said. 'Oh,' I exclaimed. Then: 'What can your daughter do?' The mother answered proudly: 'She can dance.' 'Where did she learn to dance?' 'Nobody taught her.' 'By what makes you think she can dance, then?' 'Who has she seen perform; what plays has she seen?' 'She never saw any.'

"I glanced at the two of them. Was it possible that these two country women were making a fool of me? Were they there on a bet, perhaps? A glance at their eager faces, however, convinced me that this could not be the case, and I took up my questioning where I had left off. Finally I asked: 'Whatever started her dancing?' The mother said: 'She saw some circus posters with ladies in short skirts dancing and kicking up their heels, and she came home and told me she she she she could do it, too. She did, and she's been at it ever since. At first I was afraid she'd hurt herself; she never does. Couldn't you let her show you what she can do? There aren't any circus ladies can beat her!'

"Thoroughly convinced that I at last had a rival to the Cherry Sisters, I took them out on the empty stage of the Casino, and sat down at the piano; and as I played, Ruth St. Dennis, later known as Ruth St. Dennis—raised one hand above her head, and kicked backward with one foot, touching it with her toes. With a crash I stopped the music, and overturned the piano stool in my haste to grasp her hand. This was a girl destined to become a wonderful dancer. I told her so. She said: 'I know it.'

"I signed her up as quickly as I could for the 'Passing Show,' and she made a hit as I had known she would do. She was crazy on the subject of the odd, weird and the fantastic, and read constantly. Later she went abroad. She never learned a single dance from the Orientals, though, for she has never been to their countries. She has only studied from books and improvised. A wonderful personality."

Miss Ruth St. Dennis and her company will appear at the Holbig Theater, Broadway and Taylor street, for three nights, commencing Thursday, with popular Saturday matinee.

ORPHEUM NOT TO CLOSE

MANAGER REITER RECEIVES WORD OF GOOD SHOWS ON WAY.

M. Meyerfeld, Jr., Promises Portland Theater Will Get Best Offerings of Vaudeville Season.

Carl Reiter, manager of the Orpheum Theater, received assurance yesterday that the Orpheum is not to close, as rumored, and that the policy of presenting the same shows here as in San Francisco will be continued. To set aside a street report that the Orpheum is to be discontinued within ten days, Mr. Reiter telegraphed to M. Meyerfeld, Jr., president of the Orpheum circuit in San Francisco, and received the following reply:

"Positively no intention of closing in Portland. We are going to give them the best in vaudeville. I feel sure we will win their support."

"I was confident that there was nothing to the rumor," said Mr. Reiter, "and merely telegraphed to San Francisco to kill the report from the outset. Our business is picking up every night, and there is no reason to believe that the Orpheum is to be discontinued. The people still are puzzled over the location of the Orpheum on account of the Orpheum having been housed in six different theaters in this city within the past three years. You would be surprised to learn the number of inquiries we have daily from persons who do not know that the Orpheum is at Broadway and Yamhill. I make it a practice to tell everybody that the Orpheum is across the street from the Portland Hotel to fix the location in their minds."

Received orders from Martin Beck yesterday to put the scenic artist at work to repaint all our scenery and other instructions received by me from the New York office indicate that the Orpheum has come to Portland to stay and make good through the merit of its shows.

APPLE DAY IS AT HAND

RAILROADS AND STATE JOIN FOR OBSERVANCE TUESDAY.

Pamphlets Issued and Fruit Will Feature of Dining Car Menu—Big Events Will Be at Fair.

Preparations for the observance of National Apple day, next Tuesday, October 19, are being carried forward by commercial organizations throughout the state and the railroads are co-operating strongly in the work.

The Spokane, Portland & Seattle Railroad has issued a card bearing the facsimile of a big Oregon apple, containing information about the apple and the dishes that can be prepared from it. These cards will be distributed on all trains of the system on Apple day. Other railroads are planning similarly to feature the apple by pamphlets and by special bills of fare in dining-car service.

The most important attention to be given Apple day will be, of course, in San Francisco, at the exposition. Here the Oregon building and Oregon organizations will lay special stress upon exploitation of the apple. Hood River and The Dalles are especially making preparations for a strong campaign of publicity to attract the attention of exposition visitors to the fruit which has made those districts so famous.

Mr. Yeon warned motorists that they must not exceed the speed limit of 15 miles and must keep to the right on all turns. After October 20 the road probably will be open permanently as far as Warrendale without regard to weather conditions.
