

REEDE COLLEGE WORK GETS NOTICE

Bulletin of Government Educational Bureau Features Local Institution.

CIVIC ACTIVITIES CITED

Aid Given Community in Solution of Municipal Problems Set Forth as Typical of Part University Should Play.

In the bulletin of the United States Bureau of Education on "The University and the Municipality," published by the Department of the Interior, Reed College is featured as one of the most typical of those urban universities which have carried their sphere of usefulness beyond the classroom into the everyday life of the city.

The facts which the bulletin are drawn chiefly from the reports of the first meeting of the Association of Urban Universities which was held in Washington, D. C., last year.

Because of a general feeling that there should be an association of institutions engaged in studying industrial civics problems and in rendering civic service, the Association of State Universities called a meeting of the representatives of all the urban colleges and universities in the United States.

Each representative brought a report of the methods his institution had been using in helping to solve the industrial, governmental and social problems of the city with which it was connected.

President W. T. Foster's report of the active part taken by Reed College in the solution of Portland's municipal problems was thought to be so typical of that of a college or university should take in the life of the city which it is connected to that it was incorporated in the Government Bulletin.

College is Independent.

The report states that although Reed College is an independent institution, receiving no financial support from the city, it has always endeavored to be of the greatest service both to the administration and the individual citizens of Portland.

"Members of the faculty," says the bulletin, "have aided in the work of the art museum, the public library, the vice commission, health bureau, and the home for delinquent girls. One of the faculty is head of the Oregon Civic League, an independent organization for promoting good government. One of the faculty was the first chairman of the committee of 100 which carried on a campaign that resulted in securing Portland and the State of Oregon for prohibition by some 30,000 majority."

"Another member of the faculty is president of the Oregon Social Hygiene Society, an organization which has received $20,000 aid from the state. Five members of the faculty, working under the direction of the Social Hygiene Society, have given lectures on social hygiene in public schools and to the employees of the department stores, railroad companies, and lumber camps.

Members of the faculty are on the boards of the Congress of Mothers, the Parent-Teacher Association, the Oregon League of Sciences, the College Equal Suffrage League, the Dental Education Society, the Advancing Education and Ethics Committee. The head of the biology department is adviser to the Fish and Game Commission and of their experiment stations having been constructed on the college campus.

Field Work Undertaken.

In regard to the activities of faculty and students in endeavoring to aid the city in solving some of its problems, the bulletin says:

"The young psychologists, for example, are doing special field work in connection with their subject, in which they are prepared to advise and assist with them, lived with them and got the life histories of 431 of these men. They got the kind of accurate information that is necessary as a basis for intelligent action, and the college published it."

SOME BREWERIES STILL TO OPERATE

Weinhard Plant, Largest in Portland, Will Manufacture Non-Intoxicant.

The Portland Brewing Company, 627 Upshur street, cannot yet tell whether it will go out of business entirely or take up the manufacture of near beer after January 1. It was announced that the matter is now being considered, but it will be a week or more probably before a decision is reached.

The Star Brewery Agency, 331 East Burnside street, will close its doors without a struggle January 1. Those in charge admit there is no room for argument and they have no other recourse. The Star Brewery is located in Vancouver, Wash., but markets much of its product in this state at present.

The Salem Brewery Association is perhaps in the best position of any to handle the new conditions, its product having been changed some time ago from beer to loganberry juice. It also manufactures ice and conducts a cold storage business. The Portland office, 302 1/2 Gilliam street, will be closed January 1.

MANY TO BE OUT OF WORK

Several concerns expect to withdraw from field, but Salem Establishment Already Making Loganberry Juice.

When the bells ring in the new year on the early morning of January 1, they will sound the death knell of the brewing industry in this state. Portland is the center of this business, with hundreds of men employed and several million dollars invested in beer-making plants, cooperage and bottling works. Portland breweries will not go out of business altogether, for it is the plan of some of them to turn to the manufacture of other drinks, the sale of which will not run counter to the new state prohibition law. But it is thought by even the most optimistic that the output will be much curtailed and that the large number of men employed will be out of work. Many of the breweries will close up altogether at the end of the year.

Cooperage and bottling works will be hard hit by the new law. Formerly establishments have been making beer barrels almost exclusively, and workers in these plants together with distillers, will be forced, to a large extent, to seek new employment.

The new temperance drinks, on the order of near-beer with a miniature quantity of alcohol that comes within the law, will require bottling, of cooperage with beer. The near-beer plants will be out of work. Many of the breweries will close up altogether at the end of the year.

WEINHARD'S TO OPERATE

Weinhard's brewery is the largest establishment of the kind in Portland, and it is the plan of the management to manufacture a drink resembling beer in appearance and taste, but without alcohol, across in the various quantities. The drink will be introduced under the trade name of "Weinhard's Nectar." This plant alone has a payroll of approximately $18,000 a month, with about 125 men employed.

Louis Hamig, publicity agent for the plant, says there is a distinct field for the new drink and he is hopeful it will develop a wide popularity. He says there will be a demand for some such thing to go with roasts, crabs, crawfish and other shell foods, as coffee and the usual dinner table drinks do not make the happy combination that is possible with beer. The nectar, he thinks, will meet just this demand.

Its freedom from intoxicating qualities will also, he thinks, make it possible with beer. The nectar will be manufactured and whether or not the present plant can be operated, its maximum capacity is problematical.

Gambrianus Plant May Close.

The Gambrianus Brewery, next in size to the Weinhard plant, will probably be closed with the end of the year. At least officials had no plans yesterday to keep it open. Unless some by-product that appears to them as a profitable item of manufacture is determined upon before January 1, the big copper kettles in the Gambrianus brewhouse that have been brewing beer for many years past will be cooled and empty after that date.

"We will move away from Portland; there is nothing else to do," said an official of the Enterprise Brewing Company Agency, 421 Johnson street.

The headquarters of the Enterprise company is in San Francisco and agents
