SOME GET NEEDED RESTS

Theaters at The Dalles Help Provide Entertainment for Travelers.
Veteran Storm Fighter
Guides One Engine.

"We played everything from casino to poker, even bridge."

Thus many a storm-bound passenger on the O.-W. R. & N. trains that arrived in the city yesterday spent four days awaiting a clear track at The Dalles and Hood River. And without a deck of cards time would have been heavily on their hands.

The storm-bound folk are loud in their praise of the railroad officials. The detained passengers were dined and lodged at the expense of the company and every provision possible was made for their comfort.

J. E. Verree, the representative of The Oregonian in Chicago, was one of the storm-bound passengers.

First Delay in Eastern Oregon.

Mr. Verree said that the trains on which he traveled suffered no material delay until he got into the Blue Mountains in Eastern Oregon. Most of the trouble encountered was in the Columbia River gorge.

Entertainment indulged in by the passengers stalled at The Dalles extended to moving picture theaters and card playing.

Many of the passengers stopped here just long enough to get a southern train, and the presence of sleepy children and tired-looking mothers bespeaks a trying journey.

Mr. O'Reilly has forced vacation. Among the passengers on eastbound train No. 13, which was held at Bonanza from Tuesday until yesterday morning, was Drake C. O'Reilly, who returned to Portland last night after an enforced vacation that he says was the first he has had in many years.

Mr. O'Reilly's destination was Hood River. He proceeded to that place on a 12 yesterday morning, transacted his business and returned to Portland.

A. T. Sweeney, superintendent of the Metropolitan Life Insurance agency in Portland, and a party of associates was among the passengers on No. 17 that should have arrived here on Tuesday night. He says he enjoyed the experience.

Lloyd A. Dickson, agent for the Ford Motor Company at Vancouver, B. C., also was on this train, and proceeded northward last night.

A. Cohn, president of the Northern Grain & Warehouse Company, who had been in New York and other Eastern cities on business, was detained at The Dalles.

Joseph Solomon, well-known clothing merchant, was another member of the party enmeshed in the snow. He was called by H. C. Oliver, traveling freight and passenger agent of the O.-W. R. & N. Company. He answered so that he could continue the trip.

D. G. Firestone, an official of the Firestone Tire & Rubber Company, of Akron, O., was en route to California to visit his sick daughter. He crossed the river at The Dalles and came to Portland on the North Bank road yesterday morning.

The first train that came through from Spokane on the Spokane, Portland & Seattle line carried one of its passengers, J. A. Curry, of this city, returning from a convention of the managers of the Trussed Concrete Steel Company held at Chicago.

Some Fighter Handles Train.

"Jim" Hancock, a veteran snow fighter, was designated by the railroad officials to bring the train on through to Portland, and Jim did it, even though he was cold and weary.

Other passengers on the stalled North Bank train were Bruce Clendenen and Charles B. Hurley, of the Hurley-Mason Company.

Jimmy Richardson, scout for the Portland Coast Leaguers and other times commercial man for a sporting goods house, was a passenger on one of yesterday's snow-bound trains.

He was in The Dalles Tuesday. He went on No. 13 to Pendleton and as far as Walla Walla, and arrived from that territory yesterday one hour after 11 commercial travelers did who work the same territory but who had decided to wait at The Dalles for an east-bound sleeper. And these 15 commercial travelers had to stay all that time in The Dalles.

The fact that many commercial travelers failed to reach their destinations, covering expenses, furnished many a laughable situation. "Do me a favor," becoming the crowd's byword.

The body was evidently that of a man 50 years old, about 5 feet 8 inches high, sandy haired, partially bald and with sideburns. This description tallies somewhat with that of an old Scotchman known only as "Mack," who was a woodchopper around here about two years ago and who sometimes slept in the old barn where the body was found.
