Stanford Rhodes Scholar Pictures the Famous School Since War Started.

COLLEGE MILITARY CAMP

More Than 8000 Oxford College Men Have Joined Ranks and Now Serving With Colors. Admiration for French.

Some vivid pictures of Oxford, England's university town, as it has been transformed by the war, and the military atmosphere which prevails over all, are painted by Emil Hollmann, Rhodes scholar from Stanford University, in an article, "An Oxford Year in War Time," appearing in the Stanford Alumnus for January. He says in part:

"To be sure, it is difficult for me to picture faithfully the normal Oxford, with her academic and social activities, with her intercollegiate sports—quite as difficult as it would be for old students to portray her without them—and so I shall not attempt to draw differences, but there are certain things which I shall always associate with my first years at Oxford. We began, October a year ago, with an enrollment of about 1200, as compared to a normal 2200, and we ended the year with 600 which has now dwindled to probably 300. Students, dons, professors—all alike—are being called upon in one way or another to help feed the flame of war that is scorching the face of Europe.

"Colleges have been converted into medical-military camps, with tent wards for convalescent soldiers, while the parks have been turned into maneuvering grounds, where raw recruits are whipped into shape. The atmosphere is no longer scholastic and academic—it is militaristic. The scholar's gown has given way to the khaki of the soldier, and the cad's bugle clashes frequently and continually with the knell of chapel bells.

College Men Hear Call.
"The response to the country's call among the varsity men has been most praiseworthy. A roll of service published last Spring listed the names of more than 8000 Oxford men who are serving with the colors. Occasionally one feels and is made to feel somewhat uncomfortable in citizen's clothes, and one is tempted to go about draped in an American flag (although this would not deter the recruiting sergeants from suggesting that we join).

"Not only is the university conspicuously changed, but similar changes quite as revolutionary are taking place in other lines of life. Workmen are replacing the men as motorcar drivers, as delivery men, elevator operators, munition workers, ticket takers, streetcar conductors, policemen, and so on. What an invasion of women would have meant 12 months ago it is hard to say—and one looks forward with dread and fear almost to the readjustment after the war.

"Meanwhile those left at Oxford—some 40 Americans, a few nationals and some Englishmen physically unfit for service—are trying to absorb such knowledge as can be stored away in the time not given to newspaper reading and discussions of the war."

Relief Expedition Made.
Telling of a trip which he made to the continent in connection with the work of the relief commission, he says: "I was sent to Belgium, to the border between Holland and Belgium, to establish there a control station and transshipping office. The work carried on almost daily across the border into Belgium, and while at Maastricht I had occasion to visit many of the towns which have suffered through the war—Lille, Namur, Dinant, Charleroi, Mons, Brussels, Louvain, Malines, Antwerp and intervening villages, many of which were almost totally destroyed. The widespread destruction and destruction of property, the evidences everywhere of poverty and want amongst a once thrifty and prosperous folk, left a sad picture never to be effaced from memory. What Belgium has suffered and is suffering can never be adequately described in words and it will be a long time before her people can recover from this terrible holocaust."

Mr. Hollmann also writes of his work in an American hospital at Neuilly, France. He says:
"The summer's association with the French has given me a high regard for this graceful and hospitable folk, for the quality of their fighting men, for the healthy optimism of them all as to the final outcome of the war and for their patience in awaiting the victory which they so hopefully expect. England, too, seems finally to have awakened to the reality of the war and in spite of mistakes and setbacks is confident of the outcome."

STREET PROJECT APPROVED

East Burnside Improvements Passed Upon by Council.

Final proceedings for the opening of East Burnside street from East Forty-fourth street to East Forty-fifth street, at North Mount Tabor, have been taken. The city engineer has filed his report of the amount of property required, with an estimate of the cost, which the Council has approved. A district has been formed to be assessed for the cost of the extension. This extension will be 60 feet wide, to conform with the balance of the street.

The total cost of the extension is given at $20,584.
The same action has been taken for the widening of East Burnside street and Gilham avenue, at Mount Tabor, from the east line of Sixty-third street to the intersection of East Sixty-ninth street and Thorburn avenue. The cost will be $1518.

City to Redeem Street Bond.

Street extension bond No. 2 is to be called in by the city this month. The sinking fund for street extension bonds now has a balance of $1000, which is sufficient to redeem the bond. This will be the second time the city has redeemed any of its street extension bonds, the first having been last Fall. The bonds, issued to raise money to finance street extension proceedings, are of the ten-year, 6 per cent type. Bond No. 2 will be redeemed after having run less than three years.

UNUSUAL PLAY OPENS AT HEILIG TOMORROW

"It Pays to Advertise" Is Presented by Practically Same Company That Appeared in East—Fun Is Fired Fast and Furious.

Elmer Grandin

ANY outlander from the borders of civilization has any doubts that "It Pays to Advertise," all that will be necessary to make a complete advertisement "bug" of him will be a single act of this comedy-farce, which opens a half-week's engagement at the Heilig Theater tomorrow night, with special matinee Tuesday (Washington's birthday) and Wednesday. "Bug," it may be explained for the benefit of this same outlander, is the "steenth degree of enthusiasm."

Chuck full of fun and absolutely uncharged with overbearing vitality, the Cohan & Harris production comes herded as the greatest novelty the stage has yet known. While the book of the play is the work of Rol Cooper Megrue and Walter Hackett, the galling-gun manner in which the comedy is dished out and the certainty with which the jokes hit the bullseye are said to be reminiscent of George M. Cohan at his best.

After the getaway, which itself is a joke on the audience, the laughing are turned on at the rate of one a minute, and the plot is said to hold the interest to an intense pitch through every line and incident until the final curtain.

Advertising is so much a part of modern life in America that few themes could be selected that would reach so many people. Sandwiched with a love story, it furnishes unlimited possibilities. Several exceedingly clever and successful novels in recent years have been written around this combination, and, come to think of it, the

EX-PARK CHIEF AND CITY ATTORNEY LECTURE.

"Excess Condemnation" Law in Use in European Cities Is Declared by Mr. LaRoche to Be Good.

"City Planning" was the subject of a paper read Saturday night by E. H. LaRoche, ex-park superintendent and city attorney, at the lecture given by the Portland Library. The lecture was illustrated by views of Portland as seen by E. H. Bennett, the Eastern architect who prepared plans for the city of Portland. The lecture was one of a series in the University of Oregon extension course in architecture.

MOVING-PICTURE MEN PROMOTED, ONE GOING TO NEW YORK FOR PATHE FRERES.

Pathe Freres.

W. J. Weasling, Who Goes to New York for Pathe Freres.

Burton J. Sperry, for nearly two years identified with the Pathe Exchange as traveling representative and assistant manager of the Portland territory, has been elevated to the position of manager, replacing W. S. Weasling, who leaves today for New York to accept a higher position with Pathe Freres. Mr. Sperry has been a Portland citizen for nine years, engaging in the real estate business before entering the amusement field. He and Mrs. Weasling were engaged in an exhibition enterprise on the East Side until 1914, when he joined the Pathe organization as road man. His success under Mr. Weasling was such that when the latter received an advancement he was immediately named manager.

As a member of the Portland board of censors Mr. Weasling occupied a prominent position in the Portland film world, this appointment coming to him largely because of his success in placing the Pathe Exchange on a solid footing in the territory.

wonder is that the opportunity went begging so long.

But that as it may, the fact that "It Pays to Advertise," with a solid run of one year, set a new record for farcical comedies in New York, testifying to the fact that when Megrue and Hackett "grabbed" it, they "reverted to type," they "grabbed" everything in sight and turned out a "hummer."

The company presenting the play in Portland, with one or two unimportant exceptions, is the same which recently closed the long run in New York. This should be a source of satisfaction to local theatergoers.

Two hundred and forty-three recruits, enough men to form a battalion of fighting strength, have been added to the various organizations of the Oregon National Guard throughout the state since January 1, 1915, according to figures given by George A. White, Adjutant-General of the National Guard.

All of the National Guard units in the state have benefited by the increase in the number of enlisted men, although the greatest number has been added to organizations with headquarters at the Albany.

Besides the 243 men whose names have been added as regular militiamen, more than 50 additional names are being considered for enlistment. This number of men has signified intentions of affiliating with some National Guard organization.

200 Students Are Enlisted.
Approximately 200 boys, students of high schools in different parts of the state, have enlisted in the National Guard since the first of the year. Of that number Portland has drawn the largest number, 37 Washington High School students being members of the Oregon Naval Militia, 25 more from Jefferson being in the machine gun company, and 29 from Lincoln High School being members of various militia organizations, the Eighth Company of Coast Artillery and Company F being the favorite units.

The largest number of recruits to be added to a single unit since the first of the year, 181 has been recruited by the Fifth Company of Coast Artillery, stationed at Albany, and commanded by Captain E. B. Knox. This company recently was inspected by officers from Portland who declared the company to be in excellent condition.

Recruiting Gets Impetus.
Great impetus has been given to the recruiting throughout the Willamette Valley by the co-operation between the guardsmen and the business men in which the latter have been stationed.

Stimulus has been added either through the work of the civic organizations in the different towns, members of which have made speeches citing the need of a strengthened state militia.

Such inspection trips have been made to the towns in the Willamette Valley during the past few weeks by General White and the results of his inspection and speaking tours always have been the same—a stimulus to recruiting.

Companies Are Visited.
Lately he has visited the companies at Eugene, Medford, Grants Pass, Ashland, and other towns. In those towns he has met the prominent men in open meetings, has addressed the boys of the various high schools and has visited every company of the seriousness of the work being done by the Oregon National Guard.

MR. AKIN LOSES SUIT

Brickyard in Vancouver Legally Owned by G. W. Bates.

DEFENSE HAS DOUBLE CASE

Stockholders Testify That Deed Was Given for Promise to Pay Indebtedness and Court Declares Delay Proves Point.

"It is clearly unjust to allow a man to stand by ten years waiting for the outcome of an investment that he might claim a share in the profits if there were any, but not be obliged to share in any losses," said Circuit Judge Gantenbein yesterday, when he found for the defendant in the suit brought by F. S. Akin against George W. Bates. Mr. Akin claimed half the profits of the sale, for $107,000, of the Diamond Brick Company, of Vancouver, Wash., to the Columbia Clay Company, though as vice-president of the Diamond Vitrefied Brick Company he had ratified and signed the deed assigning the property to Mr. Bates, who later organized the Diamond Brick Company. While an absolute deed was given, Mr. Akin contended that his share in the property was only given to Mr. Bates in trust.

A "gentleman's agreement" was alleged, and Mr. Bates was accused of breaking faith. Mr. Bates, however, denied that the property was deeded to him in trust and that Mr. Akin still had an interest in it.

Defense Wins on Two Points.
The court not only found that the deed to Mr. Bates was legal, but that even were it invalid, laches or delay would entitle Mr. Akin from relief in a court of equity. Judge Gantenbein pointed out that the deed was delivered to Mr. Bates in 1902, and at that time Mr. Akin accepted 45 shares of stock, for which he was to pay one-fifth of the indebtedness of $20,750 that Mr. Bates assumed, or $4150. Further that no dollar of interest or principal of the note given by Mr. Akin was paid.

"In 1908, six years later, Mr. Bates in a letter to Mr. Akin, called upon him to pay his note," said Judge Gantenbein. "In this letter, Mr. Bates indicated that he regarded himself as the owner of the property. Yet Mr. Akin waited until 1911, before even acknowledging this or subsequent letters from Mr. Bates. The first time Mr. Akin put forth his claim was after the sale of the property in 1911 for $107,000."

"Not a bit of evidence, from the conduct of Mr. Akin from 1902 to 1911, that he had any interest in the plant. Not on a single occasion did he examine the brickyard. He had implicit faith in Mr. Bates, he said. True, but as a business man of this city for 60 years Mr. Akin certainly would have shown more interest in a plant in which he had money invested, if only to make a casual visit to see if there were possibilities of profit in the future."

Court's Limitations Noted.
"Mr. Akin has not the means that Mr. Bates and his bank have, I am told. But this does not convince the court. A court has no right to take money from one man's pocket because he has more and put it in another man's pocket because he has less."

The case has been pending before Judge Gantenbein for five months. R. R. Giltner and Guy C. H. Corlies were the attorneys for Mr. Bates; E. B. Seabrook and W. C. Benbow represented Mr. Akin. After the decision yesterday Attorney Seabrook said that the case probably would be appealed to the Supreme Court.
