Evidence of Beneficial Effects of Prohibition to Be Used in Other States.

FINANCIAL GAINS TABBED

Former Saloon Sites Found Taken by Legitimate Business Enterprises, Many Paying Higher Rentals Than Last Year.

Before leaving Portland yesterday on their "water wagon" special, members of the Hanly-Landrich Prohibition party made a thorough investigation of the results of Oregon's "dry" law.

The information obtained will be used in their campaigns in states that are to vote on the Prohibition issue this fall. Members of the party had little difficulty in finding a large volume of evidence testifying to the beneficial effects of prohibition.

F. I. Warner, an erudite newspaper man with the party, made a survey of the Portland business district Friday night to determine what use has been made of the storerooms formerly occupied by saloons.

He was informed by nearly every such room on the principal business streets, such as Sixth, Washington, Morrison, Fifth, Broadway and other streets, now are used for legitimate purposes.

He was informed by many landlords that they are getting more rental out of those rooms now than they did before the first of the year.

Proof of Improvement Obtained. From the local newspaper offices they gathered an abundance of statistics to prove that business in Portland has improved substantially since the state drove the saloons and breweries out of business.

They learned that bank clearings have increased from week to week over the corresponding weeks of last year and that savings bank deposits have gone up in like proportion.

Members of the Hanly party reported that the brewery interests are energetically advertising the Multnomah Hotel failure early in the year as due to prohibition and that they are attempting to tell people in Maryland, Michigan, Montana and other states where the prohibition question is at issue this year, that Portland and Seattle are suffering from business depression.

While in Portland the party was informed that the Multnomah did not close on account of prohibition, and, moreover, that it is to reopen again, in contemplation of a greatly increasing business.

Further evidence that prohibition has been helpful to the state was readily obtainable. The party went away loaded with information that not only will be helpful to the cause of prohibition in other states but will be excellent advertising for Portland and Oregon.

Veterans Meet Party. Among the people who met the Hanly party at the Hotel Multnomah was a delegation of Grand Army veterans, headed by J. H. Brown, N. E. Wade and F. D. Kilpatrick.

W. H. Fayson, of Culver, Or., drove in an automobile all the way from his home, 260 miles away, to greet Governor Hanly and Dr. Landrich.

Governor Hanly conferred before he left, with local temperance workers on plans for defeating the brewers' bill which will be submitted to voters of Oregon at the coming election.

He explained that the brewers' associations had submitted similar measures in Colorado, Arizona, Washington and other states now operating successfully under prohibition laws.

The party remained in Portland all night leaving on their special train early yesterday morning for a trip through the Willamette Valley. They will remain in Ashland today.

Returns from the prohibition election in British Columbia pleased but did not surprise them.

They predicted that Montana and California, among the remaining "wet" states of the West, will go "dry" this year.
