MR. HACKETT ANSWERED

Oregon City Mayor's Objection to Athletics Partly Concurred In by President Foster, Who Gives Some Figures.

OREGON CITY, Or., Oct. 28.—(Special.)—The debate between Mayor Hackett, of Oregon City, and President Foster, of Reed College, on the relative merits of relay races and buck-saws in developing the youth attending the college at Eastmoreland took a new turn Friday when President Foster admitted that "the old-fashioned bucksaw is more conducive to health and to respect for the man who works than the usual type of intercollegiate athletics."

Teachers' Advice Cited. "Many teachers today tell their pupils to get an education, so they will not be compelled to work for a living." President Foster's answer was received Tuesday. It said: "I am delighted to have this expression of your agreement with the aims of Reed College. We, too, believe that athletics in American schools and colleges is overdue, and for that reason we have absolutely none of the excesses of intercollegiate athletics with which you are familiar. We, too, believe that the old-fashioned bucksaw is more conducive to health and to respect for the man who works than the usual type of intercollegiate athletics. You would not, of course, insist on the bucksaw for all our students; especially since we burn oil. You will be interested, however, to know that 80 per cent of our men are earning part or all of their expenses by their own labor."
