MEMORIES OF HARD TIMES SWAY MANY

Portland's Struggle to Relieve Distress of Unemployed Is city has spent $118,006 and the county $27,867.72 on special relief measures for the unemployed during the Wilson administration. Detailed accounts of how this money was applied appeared in The Oregonian yesterday and Friday. But the expenditure of public money was only one phase of this work, made necessary by Democratic hard times, brought on particularly by the Underwood tariff. Private relief work was also a big factor in taking care of the large bodies of men thrown out of employment.

Soup Houses Established.

The establishment of "soup" houses in various parts of the city, where meals were furnished men at a nominal expenditure, was one of the relief measures adopted. The place known as the Working Men's Club, which was established on Front street by Een Selling, was one outgrowth of this movement. Meals were furnished at the place at less than actual cost. During the existence of the place, from November 5, 1914, to March 1, 1915, a total of nearly 400,000 meals were served to the unemployed, made jobiess by "Democratic prosperity," The place was only discontinued last Spring, when the effects of war prosperity began to be felt in Portland.

Another soup house, which had an existence during about the same period, was that established by William Margulis on Burnside street. It served thousands of 5-cent meals to unemployed working men, and was finally discontinued for the same reason as the Working Men's Club. Many other houses in the city served cheap meals as a sideline for the benefit of unemployed men, who were often compelled ployed men, who were often compelled to take up another notch in their belt rather than eat, Repetition is Feared.

Speaking of the situation yesterday, Ben Selling said:

"It is my unqualified opinion that unless Mr. Hughes is elected President next Tuesday, that we will have a repetition of unemployment only greatily increased over the years 1914 and 1915.

I believe further that if by any unforesseen circumstances Mr. Wilson should unfortunately be President at the close of the war, that practically universal bankruptoy would be the condition of the United States. to have given 3718 meals. During the previous year, which is considered to have been the worst from the standpoint of unemployment in the city of Portland, the Men's Resort fed 7800 men free and sheltered 7100 men free of charge. In addition 16,000 men contributed a nominal sum for what they tributed a nominal sum for what they received in the way of food and lodging.

The Associated Charities, which recently changed its name to the Public Welfare Bureau, has also been com-pelled to assist thousands during the present administration. The records of that organization show that for the fiscal year ending October, 31, 1916, a to-tal of 1376 families, single women and homeless men were assisted. For the preceding year families, single women and homeless men to the number of 2497 were assisted.

Fourteen Charities Taxed.

This is but a small portion of the work found necessary in Portland because of the unemployed situation during the early part of the Wilson administration. All of the 1s charltable organizations in the city were taxed to their utmost to handle, even in a small measure, the situation. In addition, work done by churches and colling. tion, work done by churches and indi-viduals reached into thousands of doi-lars.

Relief workers are unanimous in de-claring that the situation was one such as they had never before experienced.

This is but a portion of the work of the Salvation Army, necessitated by the hard times. Their work also included the giving of large quantities of baskets during Christmas and relief work conducted among families all over the city.

The Men's Resort, on Fourth and Burnside streets, has been one of the institutions in the city which has been compelled to bear the brunt of the hard times during the present administration.
