Mischa Elman effected one of the greatest successes of his career, when he appeared as soloist with the Philharmonic Orchestra last week. Elman has grown tremendously in poise, and he brought into the Tschalkowsky concerts new elemants of fallent. certo new elements of delight. He played with the great pulse of buoyant youth and yet with the poise of a great career behind him. He played the Russian masterplece as it has never been heard before, as there was a temperature of the state of the stat pestuous driving energy contrasted with a most poetic and sympathetic vein, the poetry and the sentiment of a Siav who not only knows the moods of the Siav, but who is in these moods, of the Slav, but who is in these moods, and who knows what the lights and shades mean and also how to express them. The audience manifested the sort of hysteria which is only to be noted once in a great while, and then it is as spontaneous as it is sweeping. The programme given under direction of Josef Stransky was entirely devoted to Tschalkowsky.

Walter Damrosch, whose splendid programmes make his concerts a neverfailing success, presented one of the most interesting of his collection Friday afternoon, and he repeated it Sunday at Acolian Hall before two audiences that completely filled the auditorium. It is this sort of success that has made it necessary for Mr. Damrosch to supplement this regular series of concerts by the New York Symphony Orchestra in Acolian Hall with a series in Carnegie, the first of which was given Thursday afternoon, November 23, with Alma Gluck as soloist. This series, too, will be given in pairs.

The concerts of Friday and Sunday of last week were of the highest type possible to offer, and with that great self-effacement which is one of Bauer's chief distinctions he appeared in the two numbers by Caesar Franck, "Les Djinns" and "Symphonic Variations," in which the plane is used rather as part of the orchestra these self-effacement as part of the orchestra these part of the orchestra these part of the orchestra these

Into this scheme the plano seemed to fit with marvelous effect, the rich color of his tone standing out like a warm, luscious effect upon a background which was an indivisible part of itself. The nobility of the Franck music was exquisitely revealed by Mr. Damrosch, who infused it with his own warmth and geniality of spirit and his temperament always under the control of a splendid brain.

HUNDREDS OF CHILDREN FIND GREAT PLEASURE IN FLOCKING TO LIBRARY FOR AMUSING BOOKS

School Course, Consisting of Study of Card System of Catalogue and Lectures on Books, Authors and Book Lore, Assists Children in Finding Entertaining Reading Material.

the books they are reading and the joys they are getting out of the big public institution and its many branches throughout the city?

With a view toward making the boys and girls better qualified in using and appreciating the Library, the school system has introduced a speciality that is meeting with great popularity among the children. This course by a sailor with a pen-knife.

Wertheimer's well-written composition:

"To the left of the story hour room is a ship in a glass case. It is about three feet long and is painted yellow and black. There are three masts, four flags, two anchors, 24 cannon, six one steering wheel, and a rudder one one steering wheel, and a rudder one foot long on the boat. The teacher that was there taught us how to use the card catalogue. After that we had our test, and the fifth question was to find the call number of a certain book, and then bring that book to one of the librari-ans. The librarians in the children's room checked the books when we found them."

Frieda Hellman, one of the girls in the Sixth B class at Davis School, explained her visit to the Library in an interesting paper. Her introduction is good enough to make the old young and the sad happy. She says:
