AMERICAN FLAG MISUSED

Deliberate Attempt to Kill Helpless Men in Small Boat, Cruel Usage
After Rescue and Neglect of Wounds Alleged.

BERLIN, Jan. 13.—(By wireless to Sayville, N. Y.)—The official report of Lieutenant Crompton, a survivor of the German submarine U-41, sunk by the British on September 24, 1915, in the case of which the German Government has characterized as a second Barington incident, was made public today.

Lieutenant Crompton, after being wounded and a prisoner in England, was interned in Switzerland, whence his report was received. Previous statements by the German Admiralty have charged that the account he gave of the circumstances of the sinking and the after treatment of the two survivors showed a deliberate attempt to do away with the only eyewitnesses on the German side.

Lieutenant Crompton's report in part reads:
"On the morning of September 24 the British steamer Urbino, bound to England, was sunk by artillery fire about 30 miles southeast of the Scilly Islands. The crew had been allowed about half an hour to depart. When the Urbino was listing heavily and burning a smoke cloud was sighted. Submarine 41 submerged and let a steamer pass at a distance of about 200 meters.
The steamer flew the American flag. It had no neutrality sign on the side.

Steamer Opens Fire.
"The submarine emerged and ordered the steamer to stop. This order was immediately obeyed. We signaled to send the documents on board. This was not answered by the steamer, which gave the counter signal, 'I am stopping.' At the same time the steamer prepared to lower a boat. On the submarine the gun on the bow had been made ready.

"When the vessels were about 300 meters apart the steamer suddenly opened a violent fire. First with rifles along the whole railing, then from seven six-centimeter guns hidden behind the ship's side at the bow and stern.

"The submarine had received several hits by shells shortly before the continuing lower was submerged. During the entire engagement the steamer flew the American flag. To be sure, the flagstaff was turned down, but the flag was not replaced.

"As the submarine went to the bottom I was lying unconscious in the lower in company with a wounded comrade. I returned to consciousness I was swimming. After being in the water for some time I was passed by the steamer at a distance of about 60 meters. I called and raised my arms, but was sneered and spit at by sailors.

Helmsman Is Rescued.
"After a long time I saw an empty lifeboat of the steamer Urbino. When I had climbed into it I heard the helmsman calling for me and took him in.
After some time we saw the steamer again. We stood upright in the boat and waved our hands. The steamer changed her course and approached us at high speed. Soon I observed a man standing in the bow, who directed the course of the boat. As the steamer did not reduce her speed there was no doubt that she intended to ram us.
Finally they threw a rope and took us on board.

"Aside from the officers of the Ur-bino, whom we recognized, nobody wore a uniform. The crew of the steamer, according to the declaration of the first officer, belonged to the Royal Naval Reserve, but all of them, including the officers, were clad as civilians. When we arrived on board we were led to the stern and had some brandy. As no survivors were aboard, the helmsman bandaged me as well as possible. Then we were locked in a box standing on the deck."

Insufficient Food Charged.
"The report then tells of the captive being moved from place to place under charges of inadequate medical treatment and insufficient food. It concludes as follows:

"On January 18, 1916, I sent a report to the American Embassy, in which I pointed out particularly that submarine 41 was fired on by a steamer flying the American flag. I also described the destruction of the submarine and treatment of survivors in prison. When, in the middle of February, I had received no answer, I reported again, but received no answer. In March, a gentleman from the American Embassy arrived at Dyffryn Aled. When I asked him where he had received my reports he said he knew nothing about them and supposed that my reports were still in the War Office. All communications directed to the American Embassy must first pass through the War Office."
"When, at the end of May, a physician's committee arrived at the camp at Dyffryn Aled, I was immediately accepted for internment in Switzerland."
