Several Point Out That Oregon Could Hardly Be Hurt More by Hostilities Than It Has Been Already by Conditions.

What will be the effect of war with Germany on Oregon industry and busi-

This question is uppermost in many minds at the present crisis. Will the break in relations mean disaster for activities in this section of the country or will the threatened war have any serious effect?

As the situation existed yesterday, it was argued by men foremost in commerce and industry that but little adverse effect upon Oregon's export business could be added to what it has already suffered.

Theodore B. Wilcox, president of the Portiand Flouring Mills Company, said:

"Neither my experience, nor that of any other business man, covers any similar situation in the world's history. There is no precedent for the present state of affairs and any opinion can be only little more than a guess. It must be based entirely on present conditions, without knowing what events may occur to change conditions tomorrow or the next day.

Peace May Be Hastened.

Peace May Be Hastened.

"The fact that Germany undertakes to increase the scope of her submarine warfare does not lessen the requirements of Europe for foodstuffs; it only ncreases the difficulties of transporta-tion, which it hardly seems possible to make any worse than has been the situation already. However, it may devolve greater difficulties upon the European nations, and if so, it may tend to hasten the end of the war, which we mould all he glad to have a large to the second of the war.

would all be glad to see.

"My guess today, without knowing to what events severing of diplomatic relations may lead, and thereby altering circumstances, is that the export of foods, munitions, etc., will continue as it has been doing, with very little addressrictions than have already been descriptions. ed restrictions than have already been "Personally, I feel that Mr. Wilson has handled matters with discretion and judgment, as well as great patriotism, and he is entitled to the loyal sup-port and indorsement of every citizen.
