LITTLE FARM ON COLUMBIA HIGHWAY NEAR CASCADES RESPONDS TO SCIENTIFIC LABOR

Successful Experiments With Growing of Dasheen, Vegetable as Good for Food as Potato, Are Carried on by Mrs. C. W. Thompson on Six-Acre Tract of Rich Soil.

ALMOST within the shade of the southerly abutment of that legendary interstate span—the bridge of the gods—is nestled a highly cultivated country place, Midmount, the home of Clark W. Thompson, lumberman, of Cascade Locks, Or.

Much publicity has been given the towering pinnacles and leaping waterfalls of the Columbia Highway, and it may be well, but in these days of practical inquiry and impending necessity the prime exploitation of our state's attractions need not be scenic offerings—at least not to the exclusion of our resources.

On the Columbia Highway, about a stone's throw from where the backbone of the Cascade Mountains is cleft by the lordly Columbia rolling westward to the sea, lies six acres of highly cultivated soil, in itself a veritable land products show when variety and intensity of production are considered.

Scientific Farming Used.

The details of this farm or garden are attended to by Mrs. Thompson, who devotes to scientific farming the hours she has to spare from the care and responsibility of rearing a family of eight sturdy children. The success of Mrs. Thompson is typical of what may be accomplished by scientific application in Oregon.

The variety of production is a revelation. To give a fair idea of the diversity and quantity of the products grown on this tract would be tedious in detail, but no ordinary product has been slighted, and among those not indigenous to Oregon which matured last year may be noted peanuts, sweet potatoes, Swiss chard, broccoli, French endive, Spanish and Japanese chestnuts, Barcelona filberts, Satsuma plums, Franquette and Mayette walnuts, four varieties of almonds, and not the least is the dasheen.

Dasheen growing is in the experimental stage in Oregon. The writer has heard of no other experiments in the state other than those conducted by Mrs. Thompson, but as a substitute for potatoes, or more correctly as an additional product, the dasheen is entitled to great consideration.

Vegetable Is Staple Food.

This vegetable is a staple article of food for millions of people in tropical and semitropical countries. In general it is used in the different ways in which the Irish potato and sweet potato are used. The flesh of the large, spherical corms and of the larger tubers is frequently somewhat gray or violet when cooked, but this does not affect the flavor. The time and manner of cooking is much the same as potatoes.

The dasheen has an advantage over the potato. It can be grown as a Summer crop in regions where the potato must be grown as a Spring crop. It yields as well as the potato and can be successfully cultivated on wet lands where the potato would be a failure.

The young leaves, when properly cooked, can be substituted for spinach at a time when the weather is too hot to grow spinach. The nutty flavor of the tubers gives them a peculiar palatability, which strikes the fancy of many people.

Soil and Climate Suited.

The higher nitrogenous and starchy content gives them an advantage as food that makes the plant an even more valuable food producer than the potato. Mrs. Thompson's experiments with dasheen prove that the soil and climate of Oregon are well-suited for general production of dasheen, and her pioneering efforts doubtless will result in immeasurable good to the state.

To give a concrete example of what may be accomplished in intensified farming, the production of asparagus affords a basis. On a patch containing exactly one-tenth of an acre Mrs. Thompson raised 500 pounds of asparagus, and the price last year was not less than 10 cents a pound. This would make $500 an acre.

Mention should be made of Burbank's new walnut tree, which is also to be found growing as if in its native heath. This tree bears in 18 months and is said to grow to 12 inches in diameter in 12 years. Mrs. Thompson believes that this variety of tree will become of great value in reforesting logged-off lands, where quick growth is the desideratum.

While every detail of the cultivation of the soil seems to have been attended to and the highest production of vegetables, berries and fruits are promised for the coming year, the landscape and flower features of the place have not been forgotten and the rose bowers and lawn blend so harmoniously with the practical features of the places as to show the wonderful possibilities and attractions of "our highway" when gauged in the light of either artistic or practical comprehension.
