AVAL TRAINING STATION, Unversity of Washington Campus, Aug. 18.—Across the vast expanses of the old university golf links comes the stirring blasts of the bugle. It is 5 A. M. There is a rustle of blankets on the inside of the hundreds of tents, and men yawningly cast aside the covers of night and slip into the garb of day. Presently heads pop out from between the canvas sides, and soon there is an army of partly-clad men running hither and thither.

A few minutes after the bugle notes have died away a grizzled old bosun's mate, who "has circled this ol' world from the cellar to the bird's nest,' comes down between the long row of canvas tops. He halts in front of a tent, where there is no sign of activity within. Waving aside the folding with a violent jerk, he sees a mlitiaman fast in the grasp of Morpheus.

"Heave out there, gob, or I'll insert a klyl in your belfry!" he thunders. "Throw a leg, there, you fellow, or I'll sink your ship." There is no argument; there can't be. The cot's occupant shows great speed in donning his garb of navy blue. The word of the in's mate is law, and he knows how

BY ADDISON BENNETT. THE other day I had one of the finest visits of my life with an old friend of the '80s in Kansas, at a time when I was flying high but "lit suddint."

Henry F. Mason had come to Garden City from his birthplace, Madison, Wis., in 1886 and had hung out his shingle as an attordey at law, and in 1888 he was doing a moderate practice. He was born in 1860, so was then but a young man. He was a clean-cut young fellow, of exemplary habits, studious, honorable in every way, but with no apparent taste for politics or political

In those days Western Kansas was brimming over with lawyers and alleged lawyers, and they were about the ordinary run of the men in that profession. Some of them, like Henry Mason, studious, industrious and honorable: others were laxy and shiftless, and yet others were of the class that might be called the-case-be-damned-so-I-get-my-fee lawyers.

As the Fall election approached in 1888 in Finney County, in which Garden City was situated and was the county seat, there was a great scramble for the offices and in due course of time before the convention for nominations was held the usual slate was made up—and, of course, Henry Magon's name was not on that slate. But slates had been broken before that date and

But slates had been broken before that date and a few of us who knew and loved and believed in Henry proceeded to smash that slate in good old Republican convention style and Henry was nominated for prosecuting atterney—and elected by a very large majority.

I left Kansas shortly after that and lost track of Henry. But in due course he was re-elected, was then sent to the Legislature and finally, in 1903, he was clected a Justice of the Kansas Superment Court, and has twice been re-elected, his present term expiring in 1921. At the last election, in 1915, his name led all the rest in the number of votes cast—and today he is one of the
