Extension Service Is Designed for Busy Men and Women Who Wish to Make Use of Leisure Time.

Classes for the study of a wide range Classes for the study of a wide range of subjects will be formed for the University of Oregon's extension division in Portland during the 1917-18 terms. A number of them begin this week. These classes will, for the most part, be conducted by regular heads of university departments, who will make special trips to Portland to meet the students.

This extension work is designed espe-tured busy men and women who This extension work is designed especially for busy men and women who wish to use their leisure time for self-improvement. Classes have been arranged to meet a variety of needs. They fall into three distinct groups—extensive or general instruction classes, intensive study classes and special classes. No entrance examination is required for any of the work. University credits will be allowed those who finish the work satisfactorily.

Persons expecting to enroll in any of the classes are requested to register at room 451. Courthouse, during the first week in October, if possible. October 12 and 13 also will be special registration days.
