Treasonable Utterances Against the President and Trading in Official Documents to Detriment of Nation Crime.

Dolfen told United States Deputy District Attorney Rankin, R. P. Bonham chief inspector in charge of the immigration service hore, and others that he had destroyed those a long time previously, but, upon being released, he rushed to his room near the Armory and destroyed them then and there. Dolfen has two brothers in the Ger-man imperial army, one a Captain and the other a Lieutenant.

Citizen's Rights Sought.

Dolfen himself is not naturalized although he made an attempt to claim naturalization because he said his father, temporarily in this country some time ago, voted at an election. while undoubtedly priding himself that he was "getting away" with his operations. Dolfen made the usual mistake of talking too much and of carrying in his pockets pictures of the Kaiser, the Kaiser's family and other things German, such as a photograph of the submarine liner Deutschland, and made many pro-German remarks in public.

As a matter of fact, Dolfen was watched every minute of the day and night by clever operatives, under the personal direction of Chief Inspector Bonham, so that his every move is known and the actions of his consorts are on file in the office of United States District Attorney Reames.

Room Searched Recently.

Dolfen's room was searched recently and his trunk and other effects inspected by Mr. Rankin, Mr. Bonham and Inspectors McGrath and Sweitzer, at which time they found much evidence, all tending to prove him guilty of being a German spy. They later called him into a conference and questioned him concerning himself and his movements and it was at this time that he declared he had destroyed certain photographs and made light of them, saying they were of no value whatever. Immediately after this session, he hurried to his room and destroyed some things.

"After returning to Portland, he was out with myself and others on a number of occasions and always had plenty of money—as much as $500 or $600 all the time. He was a generous spender and always urged us to take the best of everything. He wore diamonds of large size and a part of the time lived at a local high-priced hotel, where it was said that the cheapest room he could get would run up to $75 per month.

"I well remember several times he took me down to the Dalbek, a German ship interned here; he said he knew all the boys on her and they always let he had destroyed to the time. been called to the attention of the Immigration Inspector's office, he was watched and developments came rapidly, but it was thought best by those in charge to permit of his remaining with his company as its chief cook, especially since Captain Crossley, in command, had requested that he be left as long as possible, as he was a good cook.

of the time he was there, according to Federal reports, and all of the names of these people are in the hands of the Government authorities here.

When war was declared with Germany and the mobilization call was sent out, Dolfen reported to his Lieutenant for duty and has since been attached to Company C as chief cook. He was watched constantly, his officers knowing the facts concerning him in sufficient detail to be on guard. It was because of delay in telegraphic correspondence with Washington that he was permitted to leave Portland with the company, as it had been planned that he should be arrented just before the boys left for the East Friday afternoon. It was not until late Friday afternoon that Acting United States Attorney-General Davis telegraphed autories.

Dolfen's history is clouded. He gives his age as 22 years, his birthday being last Friday. He admits being unnaturalized and of German birth, but tells three distinct stories as to his arrival in this country, none of which, according to Mr. Rankin, can be verified by Government records. He says he came to America first in 1901 with his parents, his two brothers, Otto and Frank (Captain and Lieutenant, respectively, in the German army), and his sister. in the German army), and his sister. They remained here nine months, he says, when they returned to Germany, but he did not stay long and came back to this country.

He has a cousin, it is said, living in Weed, Cal., named Jack Doifen. Will-iam Doifen is said to be quite well known in San Francisco and Northern California.
