I am living with a charming old French woman who has two sons at the front and who is very glad to have someone to keep her company and share expenses. I know French fairly well and, as she speaks no English. I am getting splendid practice. "Paris is almost as exciting as the front these days. We have had half a dozen air raids since I have been here and now they have begun firing the hig cannon that carries 75 miles at us. No one is cowed, however, and the city is so beautiful in the Spring at us. No one is cowed, however, and the city is so beautiful in the Spring sunshine, with the chestnut trees in bloom, that it is hard to believe in this wicked war that is not very far away."

Marshfield recently telling of the miraculous rescue of a well-known Portlander, W. G. Robertson, who is a member of the 20th Engineer Regiment. Mr. Robertson has a wide acquaintance on Coos Bay through his ahort residence here in handling property belonging to the Portland, Eugene & Coos Bay Land Company.

While crossing the Atlantic, Mr.

Robertson writes, the men were drilled constantly regarding the abandonment of their ship in the event of submarine trouble, and every man had his sta-tion. There were lifeboats sufficient for most of the contingent on board. for most of the contingent on board. When the vessel was torpedeed she had a list of nearly 40 degrees, and but few of the lifeboats could be hanched successfully. Some that were released went down to the water end-foremost, and one was cut away by an excited landsman and the entire load of human freight was dumped into the sea. The boat to which Mr. Robertson. The boat to which Mr. Robertson was assigned was lost in trying to launch it, and the men assigned to it had no recourse save to wait for the scouting war vessels. It was two hours after the explosion when a dehours after the explosion when a de-stroyer drew up beside the Tuscania, where Robertson and his companions waited. Ropes were uesd to lower the men to the deck of the rescue vessel, but when Mr. Robertson's turn came and he slid down the rope, the vessels had drawn apart and his rope would not reach. In the confusion no atterhad drawn apart and his rope would not reach. In the confusion no attention was paid to his predicament and, clinging to the rope in the hope of aid, he became exhausted and gave himself up for lost when he could hold on no longer and dropped, expecting to be swallowed in the water.

Instead of falling into the sea, he landed on an overturned lifeboat that had wedged between the two ships and had wedged between the two ships and
