WAR work and its manifold needs have taken a quick, visible grip on the activities and aims of the colleges and universities of the state in the past 15 months. Led by the University of Oregon, Oregon Agricultural College and Reed College, all institutions are responding nobly to the call of the Nation for leaders in essential industries and military fields.

Thousands of college men in the state have answered the call to arms and thousands of others are keeping the industrial and economic machine behind the lines up to maximum efficiency. Still more are aiding more directly with active work in war drives and campaigns.

War Training Held First. Adapting its industrial and military training machinery directly to war needs, Oregon Agricultural College has contributed hundreds of leaders in every phase of war activity and is accelerating work in many departments in order to meet the increased service in the present crisis. Practical efficiency has dictated that all of the moves of the school in the past year be in the direction of National service.

Overanxiety to serve their country has impaired the future usefulness of many students, according to officers of the institution, who are endeavoring to complete the training of every student before releasing them for actual work. Unlimited opportunities for serving in their chosen line at tempting rates of pay is responsible for the condition, it is believed.

Kindred Lines Valuable. While those trained in military tactics, engineering and agriculture have been of the most direct service in the war program, others with thorough education in commercial lines, mining, pharmacy and forestry have been strengthening the second line of defense.

University Students Loyal. The University of Oregon, with more than 1000 graduates and former students in the service, daily is entering more directly into the war effort. Designation of the school as a Reserve Officers' Training Corps has heightened the already strong war atmosphere of the campus. Men are now being fitted for military work of all kinds and under modern conditions. A cadet corps for younger students is planned for the regular term as a means of preparing them for Army assignments when they become of age.

Portland Schools Active. Other Portland educational institutions that are lending their resources to Uncle Sam for war purposes are Hill Military Academy and the Benson Polytechnic School. The former by its careful military training methods has furnished many capable soldiers and officers in the Army, while the latter loaned its extensive equipment for the training of the draft men in industrial lines.

The public schools throughout the state have co-operated with war work leaders in every patriotic campaign, the complete organization of teachers and pupils being utilized especially for Red Cross and food-saving drives. Other colleges in the state and Northwest everywhere have adapted their educational programs to the needs of the situation and are forming a strong link in the Nation's chain of educational and informational activity.

O. A. C. BENDS ENERGIES TO MEETING NATION'S WAR NEEDS

Military Training and Scientific Courses Grow in Number as Institution Mobilizes Its Resources.

WAR courses and military training increase from month to month at the Oregon Agricultural College. The entire institution is bending its resources to the winning of the war. Not a school or department has failed to feel the impulse of the great current of military effort surging through the country the past 15 months.

The women of the college, not only in home economics, but in the schools of pharmacy and commerce, have awakened to the need of making their training count for something in furthering the war aims of the National Government. The college, as a product of national legislation designed to help the nation at all times, was from the start adapted to the needs of mobilization. With the coming of war came many internal changes and readjustments that have helped to fit the students for the duties demanded of them.

Industrial Work Calls. In industrial work as well as the military have the young men and women responded to the call of the nation. Some, perhaps too eager to capitalize their training, have jumped into jobs before their training was complete—a course that may endanger their future usefulness to the country. Hearing the advice of Dean G. W. Peavy, of the School of Forestry, that they remain in school until their education was complete, forestry students have been uniformly successful in entering war service. Two now are Captains, eleven First Lieutenants, ten Second Lieutenants and many others have won distinction at the front.

Other departments are as busy in national service. Engineers—civil, mechanical, electrical, hydraulic, chemical, highway, mining, ceramic and experimental—are all busy in behalf of the Government. Erection of training camps, building railroads, constructing harbors, extending lines of communication, assaying ores and analyzing and testing materials are some of their activities.

Draft Men Study Ours. As an encouragement to engineers, the War Department has granted furloughs to those in the draft, so that they complete their school courses. Women graduates serving as home demonstration agents in various counties are among conspicuous examples of students who are putting to test their college training and linking it up with the winning of the war.

Facing a serious situation internally because of the shortage of young men, the colleges are striving to keep their regular departments in recognizable shape for after-the-war training. Rising to the present occasion nobly, the institutions are also looking ahead and, as always, are acting as leaders of thought and action for reconstruction work. The recent commonwealth conference of the University of Oregon confined its attention to the questions of taking care of the soldier upon his return and to present war problems. Housing, land settlement, food production, care of the crippled—these are some of the problems being considered in connection with the building-up period that is to come soon.

Men Sent For Special Training. The War Department is sending hundreds of men to the college for limited intensive training in shop work, radio and auto service. These men lack the broad foundational training of the regular course men, but they are gaining some industrial efficiency that will make them valuable to the Government.

Men Sent For Special Training. The call for our students, in industry as well as military pursuits, is creating a serious condition, said President Kerr. "Unless large numbers of new students replace those who have gone into military service, and unless former students find their college work, the institution will be handicapped in meeting its obligations to a nation at arms. Young men and women should realize that they are performing a patriotic service by completing here for industrial and scientific training that will fit them for leadership in many lines of war activity."

PAST YEAR SETS NEW RECORD. Behnke-Walker Now Coast's Largest Business College. Through the enrollment of 1600 students the past year, Behnke-Walker Business College has brought to Portland the honor of being the home of the largest business college on the Pacific Coast. More than 600 students already have enrolled for the coming year. Three full floors of the Behnke-Walker building are required to accommodate the greatly increased attendance at this pioneer institution.

WAR WORK TO BE FEATURED. North Pacific Dental College to Offer Special Courses. With its work made of more importance by the demand of the Government for dentists, the North Pacific Dental College will enter upon its 20th year this fall with an added impetus and enthusiasm. Special courses to prepare for Army work those who have enlisted in the Medical Reserve have been arranged by the school authorities. Basing its curriculum upon the most advanced ideas of authorities here and overseas, medical training is given pre-eminence. Special courses in mechanics and surgery, followed by extensive clinical practice and observation in the infirmary, supplement the medical education. Four years are required to complete the course under normal conditions.

With the increased demand for trained pharmacists, the work of this department at the college has become of rising importance. Two and three-year courses are offered. These courses have been made to conform to the modern developments along the lines of real medical service. Two-thirds of the states of the Union, many Canadian provinces and foreign countries were represented in last year's enrollment.

HILL LOOKS FOR BIG SEASON. Military Academy Alumni Taking Big Part in War Work. With its graduates winning commissions at several officers' training schools and many already in active service overseas, Hill Military Academy is looking forward to a heavy enrollment this fall. Many letters received from former students testify to the part that the academy had in preparing them for the discipline and action of Army life.

Military Academy Men Rise. Seventy-One of 158 Entering Service Have Won Commissions. Seventy-one of the 158 Mount Tamalpais Military Academy men in the service have won commissions, according to late figures gathered by the institution. In the present emergency, the academy is also accredited to West Point. The year department inspector in his May report said that the school "is undoubtedly the best in the Western department in variety of instruction and training."

Most of the Hill faculty are Yale graduates. One of the three California schools given Class A scholarship rating by the state university, the academy is also accredited to West Point. The year department inspector in his May report said that the school "is undoubtedly the best in the Western department in variety of instruction and training."
