AL. H. WOODS SURPRISES NEW YORK WITH "FRIENDLY ENEMIES," BIG HIT IN CHICAGO

Drama Built Around German Propaganda Piles Up Royalties for Author-"Passing Show of 1918" Packs Perspir ing Crowds Into Winter Garden-"The Man Who Stayed at Home" to Visit West This Season.

New York public and produced "Friendly Enemies" as the first play of the new season. It preceded the Winter Garden opening by just three days. "Friendly Enemies" has been alluded to before in this column, as it was to have opened earlier in the season. The sucess of Mr. Woods' other shows, "Busi-ness Before Pleasure" and "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath," made it impossible to bring the newest play to town and a it has been in Chicago since last Spring, and is in fact still playing there with capable substitutes in the roles created by Sam Bernard, Louis Mann and Mathilde Cottrelly. Some idea of the Chicago run may be gleaned from the fact that the authors' royalties have averaged $1,400 a week for the past at this time for it tells of two German-born Americans, rich and powerful. One is decidedly pro-German, even after America enters the war, and feels that things have been misrepresented. He contributes to one of the war funds, now a matter of real his-tory, and his son becomes one of his victims because the money he spends for propaganda work is used to blow up the transport upon which the boy is sailing to serve Uncle Sam. When learns this, his attitude change and of course the son returns safe and sound and helps him to track down the villain who has induced him to contribute to the fund. He and his friend are united upon the subject over which they have had so many troubles in the past. This is the story and as acted by the two veteran fun Louis Mann and Sam Bernard, it fairly teems with humor.

Some Sad Moments.

There are sad moments too, and all are deftly handled by the clever company. It is a delightful little play, and critics predict an all-season run for it. The story is told in connection with it of how Mr. Woods purchased the play before a line of it was put on paper. Samuel Shipman came one day to discuss an idea he had for a new play, and Mr. Woods immediately paid him an advance royalty on it and paid him an advance royalty on it and told him to go ahead. On Tuesday morning Mr. Shipman and his collab-erator, Aaron Hoffman, went to At-lantic City with their stenographer and the psychological moment.

Winter Garden Opening Draws.

In spite of the hot spell, the two penings of the week were attended by large (and perspiring) crowds. The Winter Garden Show is usually viewed at the dress rehearsal by a number of specially invited for the occasion, but this year no outsiders were the fole in Europe that Marjorie Rambeau first played in this country. An interesting controversy has arisen in connection with Stuart Walker's new play, which was to have taken the place of his "Seventeen," and as the matter will have to be threshed out in court, he may be obliged to continue the run on "Seventeen" or provide a new play. The International Play Bureau, as agent, has filed notice with him that "Seven-Un" resembles too reau, as agent, has filed hotted within that "Seven-Up" resembles too closely a comedy written two years ago by George Kaufman and circulated through the various theatrical offices under the title of "Going Up."
