HOOD RIVER WOMAN CHEERS WORKERS IN SPRUCE CAMPS

Mrs. Jean Morris Ellis, Denied Service on Battlefront in France, Plays Important Part in Oregon's Airplane Production Programme.

1st Lieut. Lester M. Ellis, Mrs. Jean Morris Ellis.

Lester M. Ellis Jr. Margaret Irene Ellis

BY EDITH KNIGHT HOLMES.
 A high and inspiring as the lofty spruce trees of the country in which she makes her rounds, are the ideals and the standards of Mrs. Jean Morris Ellis; as practical and as human as the boys who are her special friends, are the messages she brings to all who hear her. She is "mother of the spruce belt" and rightly termed, for she has the great mother heart and the love and the good sound common sense that is essential to the make-up of the real mother.
 From spruce camp to spruce camp Mrs. Ellis goes in her little old Ford and to the mills and out-of-the-way places wherever any of the 100,000 men of the spruce division are to be found in large numbers or in small groups, it matters not to her. She carries her message of man building, character building, hope, cheer, patriotism. No road is too rocky, no trail too steep and no night too dark and stormy if she feels that she must go on to tell the boys how important is their duty at home, the Army here that is to save the Army over there, the Army that is to provide the airplanes that eventually shall bomb out the enemy of progress and right.

Foreign Service Is Refused.
 For 20 years Mrs. Ellis has been a lecturer and when the war came along and she had given up her son, Lieut. Lester M. Ellis, to fight with the allies, she wanted to go overseas, but was denied that privilege because she was the service button. And then she found that through the Y. M. C. A. she could go to the boys here and every bit as helpful as she could be in France. "No, I could be more helpful," she said, and she started on her journey.
 First she had cabled to London and asked if she might do vocational guidance work among the returned, crippled soldiers and then she had wanted to go to France, but the officials said: "No," and it remained for the duty nearest at hand to be the real call for the woman who wanted to do her part. Social hygiene and character building have been her pet topics, but she hasn't preached "at" the boys—far from it. She has been an ideal mother to the whole lot. There are hundreds of boys who have called her blessed. Next to seeing and hearing from their own mothers they say has been the pleasure they have felt in meeting the mother of the spruce belt. The battalions at home she regards as just as great as the battalions abroad. She knows the importance of the ones in France, too, for her own son is there.

Spruce Workers Are Cheered.
 Mrs. Ellis is a womanly woman. She dresses in good taste and is most attractive with fresh girlish complexion, though she is a grandmother, and a good figure. She is a born mountaineer, lives in a log cabin somewhere, between Hood River and The Dalles, and takes a perfect delight in being out among her beloved spruce trees when there's a storm on and the wind rushes through the branches and to her it sings a song of victory for the allies, victory that her boys of the spruce division shall make possible.
 "I love the spruce trees and I make the boys love them and I'm sure I make them love their work," said Mrs. Ellis as she chatted over her experiences.

It was good to hear her tell of a meeting in Aberdeen where the "Liberty Legion" was organized "by the girls, of the girls and for the girls," to be of good influence among the men as well as among the sister members. It was entertaining to hear her describe her trip on a mountain trail where she got stuck in the mud and it took six privates and a lieutenant to lift her and her little car out. If ten minutes' interview can be so good, how infinitely fine must be the message when she stands before a great throng of young men banded together as the Army here to back up and save the Army there and the great cause of democracy.

home for long, as death overtook him and the family was away. It was reported to have cost in excess of $25,000 and was well finished throughout with hardwood and all modern conveniences.

ATTRACTIONS ARE MANY

KLAW & ERLANGER'S SEASON LIST IS LARGE ONE.

Preliminary Announcement of Plays and Players Will Interest Theater Patrons Here.

Preliminary announcement of a partial list of theatrical attractions for next season to be sent out by Klaw & Erlanger, producers, is of special interest to the Pacific Northwest and to Portland for the reason that all of the leading legitimate theaters of the district are owned or controlled by or affiliated with Klaw & Erlanger, and it is therefore likely that the greater number of their attractions will play in Portland.
 With the announcement comes the assurance that there will be no dearth of attractions on the road, notwithstanding increased passenger rates on the railways and rulings which result in appreciable addition to the cost of financing theatrical attractions.
 The list of plays and prominent actors as sent out at this time, to which there will be additions between now and the opening of the season, follows:
