PORTLAND MAN INVENTOR

INSTRUMENT IS DESIGNED TO LOCATE SHORT CIRCUITS.

Lectro Makes Repairs Possible on Magneto Without Taking Down That Part.

S. R. Hemphill, president of the Hemphill Trade School of Portland, has invented and patented a mechanical instrument to locate and clear short-circuits in Ford magnetos. The Lectro, which is the trade name of this instrument, promises to be a great boon to all Ford owners, says the inventor. It offers, through electrical stations, a dependable and inexpensive means of locating and clearing short-circuits in Ford magnetos by burning out foreign substances that adhere to the field coils, such as strands from brake linings, cotter-pins, nut, cotton-waste and other matter that accumulates in the engine base and is carried through by the circulation of the oil. This instrument also recharges every magnet equally, giving greater pulling force and permanence to the magnetic field than any device now on the market.

Mr. Hemphill proves by actual demonstration on the most misused of local Fords the rejuvenation and renewed "pep" in the car after a few minutes of Lectro application and treatment. These demonstrations, on old and new cars, covered a period of several months and convinced a majority of the authorized Portland Ford service stations of the value and practicability of this instrument. The Lectro method has recently been installed by the Robinson-Smith Company, Talbot-Casey, Incorporated, Palace Garage

Company, and Floyd Halladay, of this city, where local owners can obtain service.

The Lectro idea is now in shape for commercial distribution. It will be manufactured in Portland and placed with the Ford service stations throughout the United States and Canada by the Lectro Sales Company, with headquarters at 506-507 Henry Building, Portland, Or.

"Not a Single Delinquent" Record.

"Not a single delinquent," is the proud boast of local board for division 7, Portland, as the result of the registration of September 12. Contrary to the usual experience of local boards, not a single registrant failed to return his questionnaire or to submit himself for physical examination. W. F. Woodward, chairman, claims the record as still another of Portland's patriotic achievements. There are nearly 3700 registrants on the board.

Indians Face Liquor Charge.
