TEN-ROUND BOXING WANTED IN OREGON

Several Measures Are Being Drawn for Legislature.

VARIOUS PLANS PROPOSED

Advocates of Legalized Boxing Asked to Co-operate With Portland Commission.

BY JAMES J. RICHARDSON.

The announcement in The Oregonian Saturday morning that the Portland boxing commission most likely would father the boxing bill which it is proposed to present to the Oregon Legislature at Salem next week, legalizing 10-round bouts, was received with favorable comment in all quarters yesterday.

The bill, it is said by one of the commissioners, is an ideal one in every respect. The best features of the Wisconsin and other state boxing bills will be incorporated in the new measure. Several other boxing bills are being framed, it is said, and it is hoped by those behind the measure to engineer one of them through the coming session of the Legislature. One of the champions for the new bill goes so far as to say that if his pet hobby of a commission for each city is not "okayed" that no other boxing measure will have a chance of getting by.

Promoters Enter Service.
The Portland boxing commission, composed of representative business men were appointed by Mayor Baker for the express purpose of regulating the fight game. When the boxing season closed down during the Summer months last year, two of the private promoters entered the service of their country—one of them later dying and was buried at sea.

When it came time to open up boxing in the Fall there were so many applications for permits that the commissioners decided to run the shows themselves during the period of the war and donate the net profits to the Oregon Boys' Emergency Fund.

There has been no objection to this plan, and considerable money will be turned over to the fund, which is now being used to provide entertainment for the Oregon overseas troops when they land at New York.

There never has been any charges of crooked fights presented to the Portland boxing commission while the private promoters were working under their watchful eye.

10-Round Bouts Favored.
Local boxing enthusiasts want to see the boxers travel over the 10-round route. At the present time boxing within the state of Oregon has no legal status, and the purpose of the proposed bill is to make the fight entertainment legal in every respect.

It is hoped that those interested in boxing will get together and work with the Portland boxing commission, instead of trying to "single-hand" a pet bill of their own to the exclusion of all others.

WRESTLING QUESTION WORRY

University of Oregon Has No Old Men for This Year's Team.

UNIVERSITY OF OREGON, Eugene, Jan. 11.—(Special).—Just what will be done with wrestling, the problem that is facing the athletic department of the university at present. There are no old men of the last year's team who will be out and there is some talk of letting this branch of sport die.

George Taylor, Northwest intercollegiate 165-pound champion of last season, never has been able to get into this year. Taylor was thrown from a horse while in training at Camp Hill and an injury to his spine, suffered at this time, makes it impossible for him to do any muscle twisting for the varsity this year.

Harold Grey has announced that he will wrestle this year, and as he is the only other varsity man in school the prospect is none too bright. The athletic department probably will decide this week just what action will be taken in wrestling.

OFFICIALS AT PORTLAND BOXING MATCH DO NOT PLEASE FANS.

Sporting Editor, Oregonian: Dear Sir: I have attended the boxing contests regularly, along with several thousands of others, and must state that in the manner in which they are now being run off is a credit to the city and to the Boxing Commission in charge.

I hope that ten-round fights will be legalized and that this same commission will be appointed to handle them, provided, however that changes be made in the system of calling the winners.

I have been led to believe that the fighters are judged on their skill, aggressiveness, ring behavior, etc., but after seeing the work of Grant and McDonald, I have changed my views.

Now, if we must have officials, such as these, why not let them make their decisions in time to have them printed on the programme and have the newspaper men or the commission or picked judges tell us who really won?

However, if the game is to be kept going in the right way, why not get a competent third man from some other city, if necessary, the same as we get the boxers, and get someone who is known to be a regular referee, having a sense of fairness and a knowledge of the game and who will call the decisions as they should be called.

Anyway, let's have a change. (Signed) TOM N. MONKS.

UNIVERSITY FIVE SPEEDY

FRESHMAN BASKETBALL PLAYERS GIVE GREAT PROMISE.

Coach Huntington Has Ample Material From Which to Choose Team.

UNIVERSITY OF OREGON, Eugene, Jan. 11.—(Special).—During the past week the freshman basketball team of the university under the coaching of "Shy" Huntington got under way and from the first week's practice it appears to be a great squad.

At the center position on one of the teams a former Eugene High School man is holding forth. He is Prince Callison, center on the Oregon service football eleven this year.

Vincent Jacobberger, former Columbia University star, is making a very creditable showing. Fred Lorentz, four years on the Coquille High School team, is one of the fastest men on the floor and looks good at this early date.

Francis Bellar, from Pendleton, and Marc Lathan, from Salem, are two candidates who are showing all kinds of class.

As yet no games have been arranged for the first year team, but they probably will get lined up within a few weeks. Some Portland high schools may be taken on and there will be several games with the local high school team. The O. A. C. "Rooks," the Chemawa Indians and several other teams probably will be taken on during the season.

CENTRALIA, Wash., Jan. 11.—(Special).—In a fast game of basketball the Centralia High School five defeated Hoquiam on the local floor last night by a score of 29 to 19. It was the first game of the season for the locals. Centralia lined up with Cramer at center, McGaffey and Prestal at guards and Woodman and Whitford at forwards.
