of Prisoner.

John Cyril Liard, murderer, train robber, highwayman, student and master criminal, is to be taken to Salem this week to begin a life sentence for the murder, on November 19, of Deputy Sheriff Twombly. The 23-year-old ex-convict is looking forward to a life in prison with a philosophical air. He is unafraid of the future. He believes that the German philosophy, which he has studied and which he has come to believe, will stand him in good stead. He feels confident he will not spend the remainder of his life behind prison bars.

"We have convicted the most dangerous and cunning criminal who ever operated in Oregon," was the statement yesterday of District Attorney Evans. "Liard is not safe unless it is behind the bars of the penitentiary." That Liard considered himself to be a super-man and had planned to be the master kidnaper of modern times is evident from a mass of correspondence and data found in his possession at the time of his arrest two months ago. The young Southerner—he was born in Georgia—had embarked on a kidnaping plot, which, had it even partially succeeded, would have stirred Portland as one of the most daring of criminal plots.

Plans Carefully Studied.
At the time of his arrest there was found on the slender, dark-haired youth the names and addresses of a dozen of Portland's wealthiest citizens whom he had planned to kidnap and hold for ransoms of $50,000 each. That his plan might have succeeded had not his sudden and unexpected murder of Deputy Sheriff Twombly interfered. District Attorney Evans has little doubt. The papers found in the possession of Liard show that he had made a careful study of his plans and had left no loophole for possible failure.

From these letters it appears that Liard was once a student at the University of Washington. Walter Goren, special agent for the District Attorney's office, advised that Liard was exceptionally bright as a youth, and had been taken out of high school during his second year because of his abnormal mental development. He had reached his junior year in high school at the age of 11 years.

With his parents, he moved to Everett, Wash., several years ago. On June 26, 1915, he held up and robbed a saloon at Centralia. He then held up a Centralia physician and ordered the latter to drive him from the scene of the holdup. The physician found an opportunity to grapple with Liard in the machine and finally overpowered the young highwayman after the latter had fired several shots at him. Liard was sentenced to the penitentiary for ten years and was paroled on August 4 of last year. A month later, on September 25, he held up and robbed the Great Northern train 20 miles north of Seattle, when he procured $50,000 in negotiable papers and nearly $70,000 in non-negotiable papers.

Rubber Checks Wrote.
Liard came to Portland some time in October and began making preparations for his kidnaping plot. In his little apartment on Belmont street he worked late into the nights typing up his plans for kidnaping, and so careful was he to hide his identity that he wore rubber gloves while using the typewriter. He did not want his fingerprints to show on any of the papers which he used.

On the night of November 19, when Twombly was murdered, it was learned that Liard had driven to the home of four of Portland's prominent and wealthy citizens whom he had planned to kidnap and hold for ransom. At each home his intended victim was abruptly seized and compelled to give up his kidnaping plan for that night. The holdup of the toll-taker of the Interstate bridge is believed to have been planned by Liard at that moment, as he was driving home from Vancouver with his woman companion, Augusta Carlson. It has also been learned from his diary that he had planned to hold up a train at Vancouver that night, but did not carry out his plans because of the presence of too many soldiers at the barracks town.

Liard's kidnaping plan involved the carrying away of a victim in his machine. He is believed to have selected a hiding place in the dense woods near Vancouver, as he drove often in his machine to that vicinity. It is also believed that he had intended making use of the Carlson woman in furthering these plans.

Prisoners Are Instructed.
Directions to the prisoners held for ransom are explicit, and contain some pointed directions which the victims must follow. These directions are: 1. Communication need not necessarily be brief, but must be clear. 2. In no case of extortion similar to the present instance, the police have been asked to interfere. 3. No attempt is to be made to prevent friends of the principal from paying the ransom demanded. 4. The principal of the action has often been death for the prisoner. You must allude strongly to this fact in your communications. 5. You will give the most explicit instructions to your friends, relatives, neighbors or any other persons who may be contacted. 6. You will give the most explicit instructions to your friends, relatives, neighbors or any other persons who may be contacted. 7. warning which he intended handing his victim.
"I have you covered with my pistol. I am armed to the teeth and my confederates have surrounded the house. You make an outcry, move or menace me in any way I shall kill you and any member of your family who may appear."
"We want $5000 dollars. You can pay this sum or not, just as you like. If you wish to pay, it will be necessary for you to accompany me. You must do that, however, without exciting suspicion. A hint to the servants or to one of your family will be sufficient notice for me to shoot everyone in sight."

"Read this over until you thoroughly understand it, meanwhile remaining absolutely motionless."
After having kidnaped the victims, Liard had prepared a letter which he intended sending to the relatives and friends of the person held for ransom. This letter follows:
General Headquarters.—To Whom It May Concern.—We are sending to you in duplicate and by registered mail, letters written and checks signed by a prisoner of the name of John Cyril Liard, the past three years, has made a practice of kidnaping and holding for ransom wealthy persons in the United States and Canada.

six weeks. Similar apparent protection was afforded to the personnel of other hospitals following vaccination. At the State Hospital for the Insane at Rochester, with a total population of about 1500, where one case of influenza had occurred before the inoculations were given, only three cases occurred following the date of the first inoculation for a period of six weeks. With the occurrence of the second wave of the epidemic, however, there occurred a mild outbreak of the disease. This outbreak indicates that the immunity is of short duration.

"Of 1000 persons employed by one company, 481, about one-half, received inoculation 23 received three inoculations, and 95 received three inoculations. From October 25, the date of the first inoculation, to December 4, 138 cases of influenza occurred only 20 of which were among persons who had one or more inoculations. Of these 20, however, 15 were among persons who had received two or three inoculations, and only five had but one inoculation. There were 13 deaths, only two of which followed influenza, among the inoculated. In these two cases only one inoculation had been given."

CANTEEN'S WORK IS GOOD SLEEPING ACCOMMODATIONS AT DISPOSAL OF SOLDIERS.
Union Station Staff Depleted by Influenza Epidemic; Two Years' Service Ahead.

Not since Christmas Eve has a soldier been without sleeping accommodations in Portland—a condition that is largely due, say observers, to the work of the Portland Red Cross canteen. The canteen sends a representative through the downtown district, applying bedless soldiers where they may procure rooms for the night.

The average daily attendance at the canteen room in Union station is now about 500, with the prospect of heavy increases as soon as demobilization is expedited at Camp Lewis and elsewhere. On a single day during the past week the canteen served 1400 men—two complete troop trains, one from Vancouver Barracks to California and one from Camp Lewis to California.

Mrs. Ferdinand E. Reed, commander of the unit, has been notified by Major W. G. Muller, division adjutant, of the 13th Division, Camp Lewis, that a heavy movement of men will soon start southward. Arrangements have been made in accordance with Major Muller's promise that the commanding officers of the troop trains will usher the soldiers into the canteen room, when they are at Portland in transit, where they will write letters and postals, and receive apples, candy and other items of the canteen service.

Such a provision is necessitated by reason of the fact that 33 members of the canteen are ill with influenza, while 20 are absent on furlough or on duty from 6 P. M. to 11 P. M., and a superintendent is in charge from 11 P. M. to 5 A. M. Erection of Morgue Feared.
Joseph R. Whalen and Gertrude D. Eilers, owners of the Carletta Court apartments, are fearful that J. P. Mc-

Entee, an undertaker, is to erect a morgue opposite the family entrance of the apartment house, and in a suit filed yesterday in the Circuit Court they ask that an injunction be granted restraining the defendant from erecting the projected building. It would seriously impair the value of the building, the plaintiffs assert.
