Psychology of a Business Home

The surroundings of a man's office usually express the personality of the occupant. The character of an office-its appearance; its equipment; the impression it creates-may have much to do with a man's success. A first impression is indelibly stamped on the mind of a visitor.

Customers and clients are lost frequently because of an external appearance—through office furnishings just as much as through personal appearance.

Would you pin your faith to the man whose office looked like vacant loft and whose desk was a soap box? Even if he told you it cut down his "overhead" and saved you money?
