

NEW SPRING SUITS MORE GRACEFUL AND LESS RIGID THAN USUAL TAILOR-MADE COSTUME

line—and its flat, arrow shawl collar. The sleeve, as you see, is cuffless and is no lightfitting at the wrist that one might expect to get out of it. White gloves, a black straw turban and black patent leather shoes with pale gray buttoned tops complete a fetching Easter rig.

Small Bordered Veils Are Admired by Women. Shiny New Black Straw Turban Is Distinctly Smart.

SMALL bordered veils with chenille dots on a fine mesh are worn with spring turbans. The veil is just long enough to go around the hat, the bordered edges falling straight down at the back and not draping over the shoulders as longer veils do. The little veil flutters gracefully about hat and face, and is a most becoming adjunct to the costume.

There is something distinctly smart about a shiny new black straw turban with a February fur coat, and one meets more of these spring straw hats in company with midwinter coats than one does velvet and fur headgear. Most are in mushroom-like shape, but there are very chic side-long models with brims that shoot off at unexpected angles, and there are enough tricornes to prove a recent prophecy that tricornes would be very good for the coming season.

The enterprising manufacturer who turns out bungalow aprons has achieved something new and interesting in a "bungalow house dress"—a loose, easily donned waist and skirt combination which looks a little more like a presentable breakfast costume than the straight, pillow-slip shaped bungalow apron. The new house dress has a tunic, or hip-length waist, buttoned down at the front, cut V-shape at the neck and drawn in to the figure at sides and back by a buttoned-on belt, the front falling loosely like a jacket. The edges of this tunic are finished with a piping of contrasting color, and there is quite a bit of style about the comely little house dress.

A pretty blouse from Paris is of saffron yellow georgette crepe, in tunic style with a cravat belt at the waistline. The sleeves are long and set in hemstitched armholes, and the neckline is shallow and rounded. An embroidery in henna and black silk encircles the neck opening and runs down the front in an elongated oval motif. Embroidered pockets are set slantwise at either side below the belt.

A good icing can be made with two or three teaspoonfuls of sugar mixed with spices and sprinkled over the cake just before baking. To save work and fuel on Sundays try having only one or two hot dishes besides coffee. The rest can all be made the day before and used cold. Rhubarb Fritters. Mix together three cupfuls of flour, half a teaspoonful of salt and two teaspoonfuls of baking powder. Beat lightly two eggs, add one cupful of milk and gradually blend the liquid with the flour mixture. Add one tablespoonful of melted olive oil, one tablespoonful of molasses and one pint of drained rhubarb, cut in tiny pieces. Fry in small, thick cakes on a greased griddle and sprinkle with crushed maple sugar as baked.

There is one sure way that never fails to remove dandruff completely and that is to dissolve it. This destroys it entirely. To do this, just get about four ounces of plain, ordinary liquid arvon; apply it at night when retiring; use enough to moisten the scalp and rub it in gently with the fingers tips. By morning most, if not all, of your dandruff will be gone, and three or four more applications will completely dissolve and entirely destroy every single sign and trace of it, no matter how much dandruff you may have. You will find, too, that all itching and digging of the scalp will stop instantly, and your hair will be fluffy, lustrous, glossy, silky and soft, and look and feel a hundred times better. You can get liquid arvon at any drug store. It is inexpensive, and four ounces in all you will need. This simple remedy has never been known to fail.—Adv.

Conspicuous nose pores

How to reduce them

Complexions otherwise flawless are often ruined by conspicuous nose pores.

The pores of the face are not as fine as on other parts of the body. On the nose especially, there are more fat glands than elsewhere and there is more activity of the pores. These pores, if not properly stimulated and kept free from dirt, clog up and become enlarged.

To reduce enlarged nose pores: Wring a soft cloth from very hot water, lather it with Woodbury's Facial Soap, then hold it to your face. When the heat has expanded the pores, rub in very gently a fresh lather of Woodbury's. Repeat this hot water and lather application several times, stopping at once if your nose feels sensitive. Then finish by rubbing the nose for thirty seconds with a piece of ice.

Notice the improvement the very first treatment makes—a promise of what the steady use of Woodbury's Facial Soap will do. But do not expect to change completely in a week a condition resulting from long continued exposure and neglect. Use this treatment persistently. It will gradually reduce the enlarged pores and make them inconspicuous.

Get a cake of Woodbury's Facial Soap and begin tonight the treatment your skin needs. You will find Woodbury's on sale at any drug store or toilet goods counter in the United States or Canada. A 25 cent cake will last a month or six weeks.

AUCTION BRIDGE BY ANNETTE BLANCHIE SHESLEY

LAST week I treated of the business double, the double commonly in use and best understood. Today I take up the informative double there is considerable difference of opinion, some warmly advocating it, others as strongly denouncing it. Among the well known authorities who have widely divergent views on the subject are Milton C. Work and Miss Florence Irwin. As it will be interesting to compare their diametrically opposed views I give verbatim what each has to say. Mr. Work speaks as follows: "An interesting situation arises when, as often happens, the dealer has bid no trumps and second hand also has a no trump. If he passes, the one with no trump is practically sure to stand and should the balance of strength be in his partner's hand he may get a paltry 50 or 100, but lose an opportunity to win the game. If he bid two no trumps and his partner have a bust, he is apt to be severely penalized.

are his partner, you must never leave him in. "Anyone who doubles a one no-trump is saying to his partner: 'I, too, have a no-trump hand. Bid two in your best suit, no matter what it is, for I will give you general support. The partner thus commanded is frequently forced to bid 'two clubs' on four to a seven-spot (or some similar bid), and is often heavily defeated. All the good cards have been divided between the two no-trump hands; the club bid hits strength in the adverse no-trumper, instead of in the friendly no-trumper, and the bid goes to smash. I have had my partner double a 'one no-trump,' and put it up to me to bid two in my best suit. I have bid 'two hearts' on the ace, king, jack, small, and been defeated by two tricks.

"A far better way of getting around the same situation is to use your own no-trumper to play against the adverse no-trumper and to hold it down; or else, to bid 'two no-trumps' against the adverse 'one no-trump,' if you are very strong, or if the adverse bidder could take a rubber on his bid. It is worth a trick or two to play the hand; you can force the adversary to discard on the trumps, in place of his forcing you to discard on his suits.

"The player who doubles a one-bid in any suit says to his partner: 'I have a no-trump except for two hearts that I don't suit that suit. Do you?' If his partner does, all will go well; but if he doesn't, Heaven help him! He must bid. But I don't know what to tell him to bid. I have never seen any one else who could supply such information.

"There are a certain few players who double a one-bid in any suit, in order to show a stopper. If the partner wants to go to no-trumps, but the generally accepted meaning of such a double is 'no-trumper except for lack of a stopper in the suit named.' "Object to informative doubles, because: "1. They are unethical. They don't mean what they say, and they give information by false (i. e., illegitimate) bids.

"II. They are tremendously apt to be inconvenient to one's partner.

"III. The day of force, or appreciation, there is a certain school of players who love false bids and calls. The moment they are obliged to drop one set, they take up another.

"IV. There is always a better way of getting round the same situation. However, there is a certain school of players who love false bids and calls. The moment they are obliged to drop one set, they take up another. They even unable to grasp, or appreciate, the straightforward game. I have found the consensus of intelligent and expert opinion heavily against informative doubles. I have seen men start out with the idea that this game of informative doubles was 'the only game.' And I have seen them find it so expensive in actual play that they have dropped it in disgust. If you play this game, or if you meet it, you must know what to do. The advice is easily given: "As partner, never pass an informative double, as adversary, never bid against it.

"And one more bit of advice I will offer to my readers: "Let informative doubles alone."

While Miss Irwin's objections to the informative doubles are numerous, her chief objection lies, it will be seen, in the fact that it imposes an obligation upon one's partner which he has no means of escaping. He must comply with the demand made upon him. He cannot leave the double in, therefore he must bid. This it cannot be denied is at times an awkward thing for him to do; nevertheless his partner (the doubler) will rest entirely with his support any bid he may make, so if he should consider that he is bidding on the strength of his partner's hand, not on the weakness of his own, while it is not pleasant to consider failure in any game or under any conditions, the onus of the failure in such case (if failure there be) will rest entirely with his partner, not in any sense with himself.

I am a strong admirer of Miss Irwin's clear logic and forceful style of writing, and on most points pertaining to the game we are entirely at unison. The more, however, I have to do with the informative double, the more it appeals to me and the more I find it to be trick-winning and effective, not only adding variety and interest to the game, but often resulting in a good score, perhaps game—it may be the rubber game—to the side employing it; the side which otherwise could at best secure an overtop score only. And while such score is by no means to be despised, especially in the earlier stages of the game, game is, or should be, the goal of all players and this can be secured only by the side getting the declaration. The result of the double, to be sure, may be partial game only, but as Miss Irwin herself says, and as I think all sound players realize, a partial game is greatly to be preferred to no score at all. With a score, for instance, of 18, a player's restrictions with regard to declarations are greatly lessened, as two of anything will give him game. With a score of 24, one of any bid will give him game, and a club bid can accomplish this result as readily as a no-trump bid.

The proper use of the informative double calls necessarily for the keenest intelligence. As Mr. Work says, it can easily be abused. This, however, may be said of any policy of play known to the game. When used with proper care and judgment and discretion, I think it will be found of the greatest value, and in my opinion advanced players should not hesitate to employ it. The average player or beginner should avoid it as he would a scorching fire.

Several examples of the efficacy of this double have come recently within my observation, some of which I will give next week.

Strawberry Custard.

Prepare one generous pint of thick, boiled custard from one pint of milk, one tablespoonful of cornstarch, a pinch of salt and two eggs beaten with two tablespoonfuls of sugar. Cook the cornstarch with the milk for five minutes before adding the eggs. Remove from the fire, cool, flavor with vanilla extract, and when cold turn into a chilled freezer. Freeze slowly until the cream begins to congeal and add one large cupful of strawberry puree made from the canned berries pressed through a potato ricer. Continue to freeze slowly until firm and smooth.
